LORD STANLEY moved for leave to bring in a Bill to enable the Secretary of State in Council of India to raise money in the United Kingdom for the service of the Government of India. He began by giving an outline of the financial state of India during the last two years, compared with that of the preceding two years. The total revenue in the years 1856-57 was, he said, £33,303,000; the expenditure £33,482,000, showing an apparent deficiency of £179,000; but this expenditure included a large sum laid out upon objects which came under the comprehensive title of "public works," but for which there would have been a considerable surplus. The deficiency, which in the year 1853-54 was £2,100,000, was in 1854-55 £1,700,000; in 1855-56, £1,000,000; and in 1856-57, as before stated, only £179,000, showing that, at the time of the outbreak of the mutiny, the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure was nearly restored. The accounts for 1857-58 had not been received, but the estimated revenue was £31,544,000, and the expenditure £39,129,000, showing an estimated deficiency of £7,600,000, besides the extra expense for troops and stores, amounting to £1,500,000; so that the total deficiency in the year 1857-58, in round numbers, amounted to £9,000,000. The estimate for 1858-59 was—revenue, £33,016,000; and expenditure, £45,829,000, showing an estimated deficiency of £12,800,000, to which if the deficiency of 1857-58 be added, the total deficiency of these two years since the mutiny was £21,600,000, in which no account was taken of the compensation for the loss of private property. Lord Stanley then noticed the items of the Indian revenue, four-fifths of which was derived from two sources—namely, the land revenue (including the sayer and abkaree taxes) and the opium monopoly, neither of which admitted of augmentation. The former grew only with the growth of the territory, and the latter was, upon principle, open to objection. The material progress of India, therefore, did not, as in other countries, produce a corresponding result upon the public revenue, while there was more difficulty in imposing new taxes in India than elsewhere. There was not the same means of ascertaining what the public feeling was, nor the same opportunities of receding from an unpopular impost. There was only one resource, that of diminishing the outlay, and he thought he might safely assume that the deficiency of £21,600,000 was more than due to an expenditure for extraordinary services. The military expenditure for 1856-57, the year before the mutiny, was £11,548,000. In 1857-58, the first year of the mutiny, it amounted to £18,212,000, and in 1858-59 it reached £22,598,000; so that there was in these two years an excess of nearly £16,000,000 in military expenses alone. Besides this, the loss of revenue by non-collection and plunder was estimated at £5,650,000; these two causes alone made up a sum of £23,620,000, exceeding the amount of the apparent deficiency. He looked forward likewise, he observed, to a considerable reduction of the civil expenditure by the more extensive employment of uncovenanted servants. The salaries of the covenanted servants were undoubtedly large; but no one, he remarked, ought to deal with this question without considering the extreme difficulty of getting fit men to fill that service. Lord Stanley set forth various grounds which led him to form hopes that the financial condition of India would improve by the diminution of expenditure as well as by an impulse given to the revenue. The military ascendancy of England, he observed, had been completely established; changes of policy had been introduced, our power had been concentrated, and a large portion of our territories had been so recently acquired that time had not been afforded for the development of their resources. He then proceeded to another branch of the subject, namely, the present state of the Indian debt, the amount of which was £74,500,000, of which the home debt was £15,000, and that raised in India £59,500,000. However great this debt might appear, yet, relatively to the amount of the revenue up to the year 1856-57, it had not increased, not exceeding two years' revenue. He dwelt upon the enlargement of the commerce of India, which had doubled in the last twenty years; upon the extension of public works and railways, and upon the returns already yielded by some public works. He then adverted to the subject of the tenures of land in India, with special reference to the colonisation of the country by Europeans, and pointed out the difficulty and danger of meddling with the different modes of land settlement. One class of lands the State had the power to deal with unshackled—namely, unoccupied and unclaimed lands, and it was quite possible, he thought, to open these lands to Europeans. Upon this part of the subject he adverted to the enam inquiries, respecting which, he remarked, an error prevailed. The main object of these inquiries was not to improve the revenue or to destroy titles, but to confirm them; to give to landholders what in this country was termed a Parliamentary title. In conclusion, he asked the House to authorise a loan to the Government of India of £7,000,000. The course he proposed to take was founded upon the precedent of last year, it being intended that the loan should be secured upon the revenues of India. He had great hopes that, although the deficiency might continue, it would not be necessary to make any future loan for India in this country.

Lord STANLEY subsequently altered the terms of his motion, it being objectionable in point of form, and moved that the House do resolve itself into a Committee to consider the subject on Friday.

The motion, after some conversation, was agreed to.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC IN INDIA.

Mr. GILPIN wished to give notice that, on an early day, he should move, that in the opinion of the House, it is expedient that the Government monopoly in the growth of opium should be discontinued in the Presidency of Bengal, as well as in the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay, except so far as might be requisite for medicinal purposes.

THE INDIAN ARMY.

Colonel SYKES asked the Secretary of State for India whether extra batta would be given to the troops of the successful Persian expedition, having reference to the privations and inconvenience to which the force was exposed on board ship, particularly the native portion of the force? Whether the recommendations by Brigadier Gen. Jacob, dated Bushire, 13th July, 1857, of certain officers and men for the Victoria Cross, were to be carried into effect? Whether the civilians who had distinguished themselves in a military capacity during the mutiny in India were to have any specific mark of the approbation of her Majesty's Government? Whether the report of the commission upon the re-organisation of the Indian army would be laid upon the table of the House? And whether, as the maintenance of a standing army under the Crown, independently of the annual Mutiny Act, involved a constitutional question, time would be given to the House to consider any recommendations in the report before they were carried into effect?

Lord STANLEY said that with respect to the first question of the hon. and gallant gentleman, it was not intended to grant extra batta to the troops of the Persian expedition, except on the recommendation of the Government of India. As to the second question, he was informed that the recommendations of Brigadier-General Jacob had not been received officially from India. Respecting the case of the civilians in India who had distinguished themselves in a military capacity, he had written twice to the Government of India to furnish him with a list of them, but had received no answer. The report of the commission on the Indian army would be duly laid upon the table of the House. With respect to the last question that had been put to him, he felt there was some difficulty in giving an answer to it, and it would be very ill-advised on the part of the Government to take any decisive step, without the fullest consideration, on such an important question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FEB. 18.

EAST INDIA LOAN.

Lord STANLEY, in moving that the House do resolve itself into a Committee upon the East India Loan, took an opportunity of explaining the discrepancy between the statement he made the other night regarding the finances of India and the Parliamentary papers laid before the House. Great part of this discrepancy, he observed, arose from the different rates at which the rupee was converted into sterling money. He had stated the gross revenue of India in 1856-57 at £33,303,000, and the Parliamentary paper gave the amount £29,702,000. A great part of this difference was due to his having taken the rupee at 2s., whereas in the Parliamentary accounts it was taken at 1s. 10½d. He believed that his value, with reference to the price of bullion, was much the nearest; but this accounted for a discrepancy of £2,081,000. Another cause of discrepancy, which he had not been aware of at the time, was that in the Parliamentary accounts items were included to the amount of £1,519,000, which were not considered to form a part of the public revenue. In future, however, they should be included in the annual accounts. The amount of debt he had stated was strictly correct; its total was £74,543,000, including the home debt, as well as that raised in India.

The House having then resolved itself into a committee, Sir C. WOOD, premising that he intended to offer no opposition to the loan, entered very copiously into the general financial state of India, of which he drew a gloomy picture. He strenuously urged the inexpediency and impolicy of this country undertaking the pecuniary liabilities of India; but, if we wish to avoid them, we must, he observed, be exceedingly cautious in dealing with Indian revenue and Indian expenditure. He noticed the disproportionate increase of the latter, and, in considering the future prospects of the revenue, he thought that there was, at present, a prospect rather of a reduction than of an increase in the land revenue, while that derived from opium was variable and precarious. The Chinese, having legalised the importation of opium, might sanction its cultivation in China, a measure which would seriously affect the Indian revenue. He discussed the modes suggested by Lord Stanley of keeping down the expenditure, by reducing the salaries of the European servants, and by a more extensive employment of natives. To the latter expedient he offered various objections; and, upon the whole, he was of opinion that the civil expenditure was more likely to increase than diminish. The military establishment was the only branch of the expenditure in which any material reduction could be made; but upon this point Lord Stanley had given the House no information, though it was evident that we must be prepared for a considerable increase of the European force in India. His calculation of the Indian liabilities exceeded that of Lord Stanley; including the present loan he believed they amounted to £90,000,000.

Sir E. PERRY threw some still darker tints into the picture. He regarded the present state of the finances of India as alarming. The Indian debt, properly speaking, amounted, he said, to £110,676,955, which, taking the net revenue at £23,000,000, was a very large debt, being more than four years' revenue. He insisted that the Indian Government should be compelled to make the expenditure and the revenue balance each other. He advocated, upon political as well as economical grounds, the larger employment of native functionaries, and the creating a property in land, to be given to European settlers as well as natives. He was hopeful of India, under a good Government, with a native agency.

Mr. LIDDELL defended Lord Stanley's statements against the criticisms of Sir C. Wood.

Mr. V. SMITH complained that the House had no results before it; that Lord Stanley had held out nothing upon which it could form an opinion. Lord Stanley, he observed, had omitted in his statement compensation for losses of property, which must be extremely large. He (Mr. Smith) had, however, better hopes of the elasticity of the Indian land revenue than either Lord Stanley or Sir C. Wood, and he believed that fresh taxes might be levied. The civil expenditure might, in his opinion, be diminished, but, as a large European force must be maintained in India for some years, he did not see how there could be a reduction of the military expenditure. He trusted that in the reconstruction of a native army there would be no native artillery.

Mr. W. VANSITTART, having been a resumption-officer in India, related facts showing the gross fabrications of firmans and sunnuds by holders of lakiraj (or rent-free) lands.

Mr. CRAWFORD gave some details respecting Indian railways, showing that they were already highly remunerative. He threw out suggestions regarding the financial operations of the Indian Government, and thought too great stress was laid upon the possible diminution of the opium revenue. China, he said, was not a country where opium could be profitably grown to any great extent.

Mr. CARDWELL, with reference to railways in India, hoped the time was coming when the system of guarantees would be at an end. He hoped that the stipulation in the Loan Act of last year, providing that the pecuniary burdens of India should be borne by the Indian Exchequer alone, would not be departed from; that India when it borrowed money should borrow on its own security.

Sir H. WILLOUGHBY suggested that the Bill authorising this loan should contain a clause of appropriation, confining it to specific purposes.

Mr. LOWE observed that, as Lord Stanley admitted he saw no prospect of increasing his ways and means, and of diminishing his expenditure, there must be a constant deficiency in the Indian finances. The House had, therefore, a right to expect from him the suggestion of measures of relief. Means might be taken to bind the people more closely to us, which would enable us to reduce our military force in India. Land in that country failed to perform the functions it discharged everywhere else, because our land revenue system and onerous assessment left no property in the land. He protested strongly against the system of guarantees.

Lord STANLEY made a brief reply to objections, and answers to questions put to him. With respect to the responsibility of the Indian Exchequer alone for the debt of India, he explained what he had said on Monday as to the possible contingencies under which the Imperial Exchequer might incur a liability.

After some remarks by Mr. KINNAIRD and Colonel SYKES, a resolution on which to found a Bill was agreed to.

MADRAS RAILWAY.

The report of the directors states that during the past half-year a considerable addition has been made to the number of the company's engineering staff, and their operations have also been very considerably extended. The accounts received of the progress of the works of the south-west line between Goriattum and Beyoor are, with one exception, very satisfactory; and the entire line will be finished as fast as the permanent way materials can be carried up for it. The further opening for traffic to Vaniembady will be delayed some months longer, owing to unlooked-for difficulties in completing a bridge over the Palar River, between that town and the present western terminus at Goriattum. On the completion of this bridge the simultaneous opening of the railway as far as the important station of Salem, a distance of above two hundred miles from Madras, will take place. The progress of the works on the western half of the line is described as extremely satisfactory, and by the end of the year the line is expected to be completed for seventy or eighty miles, from Beypoor to Paulghaut, if not further. Instructions from the home authorities have gone out to the local Government to proceed without delay with the projected improvements of the port of Beypoor, and of the water communication between the railway and the important town and harbour of Cochin. This is to be effected by means of a short canal from a point where the railway touches the Ponany River to the great backwater, or inland navigation, which extends by Cochin southward and parallel with the coast nearly to Cape Comorin. The engineers are now actively engaged in the survey of the Bangalore line, which leaves the main south-west line near Vaniembady, about 120 miles from Madras, and will be about eighty miles in length. Instructions have lately been sent for the survey also of the branch from the main line to the foot of the Neilgherry Hills. It is considered that the largely increased number of European residents, and convalescents, and the contemplated extension of the Government establishments on that salubrious table-land, afford good prospects of traffic on this short branch. The survey of the north-west line has been extended to its proposed junction with the railway from Bombay, in the Raichor Doab, formed by the rivers Krishna and Tungboudra. The precise point of junction is now under consideration by the officers of the two Governments and railway companies. The length of this line from Arconum, where it leaves the trunk line at forty-two miles from Madras, will be 320 to 340 miles, the greater part of which is through an easy as well as fertile country, producing much cotton and indigo. Between Arconum and Cuddapa the work of construction is going on vigorously, and every exertion will be made to open it as speedily as possible. The trains have continued to run over the ninety-six miles of the line between Madras and Goriatum with regularity and without accident. The receipts on the line increased from £11,720 on sixty-five miles of railway in the half-year ending the 31st of December, 1856, to £21,720 on ninety-six miles of railway for the half-year ending the 31st of December, 1858. It is proposed to convert the paid-up shares of the company into stock. It appears the capital expended on the south-west line amounted to £2,425,480, leaving a balance of £275,340; and on the north-west line to £42,506, leaving a balance of £443,678. The interest account shows that £115,224 was paid to the proprietors in the year 1858.

CEYLON RAILWAY.

The directors' report states that the working plans and sections are complete for the first thirteen and a half miles from Colombo, and the company is in possession of the greatest part of the ground. From the sixteenth to the twenty-sixth mile the survey has also been completed, and the plans are now before the Government for approval. From the twenty-sixth to the fortieth mile, the surveys are very far advanced, and will be complete by the middle of February. Nine hundred men are at work on the first five miles; 360 more at Ragame (between the eighth and tenth miles), of whom 126 are Singalese; and every week will add to the amount of labour employed, as the coolies come down from the estates, and the water recedes from the low country, which has been inaccessible for many weeks. Large quantities of tools and plant have arrived from England. The agents are amply supplied with funds. The course of the railway for about the first forty miles is definitively fixed, and by the latest accounts the directors learn that a large additional force of coolies was about to be placed upon that portion; but the difficulty of carrying a line over the hill country to Kandy, by the route indicated by Captain Moorsom in his report to the Government, appeared to the Company's engineer, on minute examination, to be so serious that instructions have been sent out to investigate the country in other directions, with a view to ascertain if a more eligible line cannot be found.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Walne, Esq., now H.M.'s Consul at Cairo, to be H.M.'s Consul at Alexandria. The Queen has also been pleased to approve of Mr. A. Connal as Consul at Port Louis, Mauritius, for H.M. the Emperor of Austria.—Feb. 16.—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Binny Scott as consul in the Island of Ceylon for H.M. the King of Sweden and Norway. The Queen has also been pleased to appoint Eldred Mowbray Cole, Esq., to be Auditor Genl. for the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.—The Secretary of State for India in Council has just issued his regulations for the examination of candidates for admission into her Majesty's (no longer the Company's) Civil Service in India. An examination will be held in London in July next, and of the successful candidates twenty-six will be selected for the presidency of Bengal, eight for that of Madras, and seven for that of Bombay; in all, forty-one. The subjects to be got up for the examination are the language, literature, and history of England, Greece, Rome, France, Germany, and Italy; pure and mixed mathematics, natural science (chemistry, electricity and magnetism, "natural history," geology, and mineralogy), logic and mental and moral philosophy, Sanscrit and Arabic (both language and literature); 7,375 marks will be allotted, of which 1,500 to English and composition, and 1,250 to mathematics. A second examination must be passed by the selected candidates in Sanscrit, the vernacular dialect of India, the history and geography of India, the general principles of jurisprudence, the elements of Hindoo and Mahomedan law, and in political economy. No candidates will be allowed to set sail for India until they shall have passed this further examination, or after they have attained the age of twenty-four years. They must also give good proof of their sound bodily health and good moral character. Lord Stanley has decided to allow £100 to each of the selected candidates to meet the expenses that must be incurred by them before they proceed to India. The age has been fixed at twenty-five for candidates who may pass their first examination in July, 1859; after that the age will be twenty-four.

THE INDIA OFFICE.—On Wednesday last was printed a copy of an Order in Council of the 11th of January, 1859, approving a scheme for the permanent establishment of the Secretary of State for India in Council, under the 21st and 22nd of Victoria, cap. 106. To this Order is appended the scheme itself, with a list of the offices and the salaries thereto annexed. The Secretary of State receives £5,000 a year, the Under Secretary of State £2,000, a second Under Secretary £1,500, the Assistant Under Secretary of State £1,950 (to be reduced hereafter to £1,500), and fifteen members of Council £1,200 each. The chief clerk in the Secretariat department now receives £1,083, but when he vacates office the salary will be reduced to £800. There are many other reductions which will take effect on the death or retirement of the actual holders of office. The portion of the establishment of the Secretary of State in Council to be retained at the office of the late Board of Control, in charge of records and papers, includes the assistant to the secretary and keeper of the records, with £1,400 (hereafter £1,000) a year; a clerk, a registrar, an office-keeper, a housekeeper, three messengers, a hall-porter, and three maid-servants, who will receive £40 each, board wages.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.—The Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India in Council has sanctioned the appointment of Mr. Clifford Craufurd, of the Cashiers' Department in the India-office, as Secretary to the Court of Directors of the East India Company, during the continuance of the existing arrangements between the Council of India and the Court of Directors.

EAST INDIA FINANCES.—The following copy of a financial despatch, dated 31st of January, 1859, was published on the 17th of February:—

"Financial—No. 9.

"East India House, London, Jan. 31, 1859.

"My Lord.—Adverting to paragraph 36 of my despatch in this department, dated 19th of January, 1859, No. 6, I now forward an estimate of the receipts and disbursements of the Home Treasury for the year 1859–60, commencing with the 1st of May next. The probable amount of payments on account of the Indian railways is not included, it being assumed that these will be balanced by the receipts from the several railway companies. It is my intention to ask the sanction of Parliament to a loan to meet the deficiency shown in the estimate above referred to; but, regarding it as most unsatisfactory to continue a system of loans for the general wants of the Government, I must again press upon your immediate consideration my desire, and the desire of the Council, that the question of the measures to be adopted for equalising your revenue and expenditure may receive that attention from you which its importance so imperatively demands, and that the result of your deliberations may be reported to me without delay.—I have, &c., "STANLEY.

"The Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council.

This letter was accompanied by an estimate of the receipts and disbursements of the Home Treasury for the year to the end of April 30, 1860. The receipts are estimated at £7,151,680, and the disbursements at £6,151,680, leaving £1,000,000 as "the amount to be held in cash." The debtor side of the account has an item of £5,377,819 as "the estimated balance deficient on the 30th of April, 1860." The disbursements on the other side include £1,230,240 for dividends on India stock, bonds, and debentures; £48,209 for interest on temporary loans; £1,268,960 for military stores, purchase of steamers, and transport of troops and stores; £1,198,711 for pay-office demands on account of troops and stores, mission to Persia, and establishment in China; £1,439,480 for civil service annuities and military and marine retired pay; £263,400 for bills of exchange from India and family remittances; and £704,680 for charges general.

EAST INDIA LOAN.—It appears that the total subscriptions to the Five per Cent. Loan, opened the 16th of January, 1857, in India, represented a total of 16,98,03,300 rupees, the amount in cash being 9,56,02,759 rupees, and in the transfer of Three and a-Half, Four, and Four and a-Half per Cent. Loan paper, 7,42,00,441 rupees.

DIRECT CADETS.—The following gentlemen having received nominations passed the required examination for admission into the Indian military service on the 15th inst., viz.:—Messrs. W. C. Anderson, E. W. Begbie, R. P. Blake, H. A. Bishop, J. E. Campbell, Geo. Godfrey, A. Fitzgerald, W. L. Ranking, W. A. Salmon, and F. Smalley.

EAST-INDIA REVENUES.—The following stocks, loans, and debts are chargeable on the East-India revenues in India itself, against £43,341,533 of registered debt; £2,965,102 of loans; £1,127,484 of treasury notes; £4,437,489 of service funds; £2,706,623 of bills payable; and £7,432,803 of deposits, &c., making a grand total of £51,997,631, bearing interest, and £10,013,203, not bearing interest. The total liabilities in England amount to £20,305,846, including £6,999,917 of India bonds, £9,997,000 of India debentures, and £3,498,333, the capital of Indian railway companies remaining in the home treasury.

A CORPS OF CIVIL ENGINEERS is to be formed for permanent service in India.

MAJOR HUGH CALVERLY COTTON has been elected as superintending engineer of the Madras Irrigation Company.

GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA.—It appears that the estimated cost of the first section of the railway from Negapatnam to Trichinopoly being now fixed, with the sanction of the Secretary of State for India in Council, at £500,000, that amount only will be called up. Any scrip certificates remaining unregistered on the 26th inst. are to be cancelled, and the money paid thereon forfeited to the company.

BOOKS.

Thoughts on the Policy of the Crown towards India. By J. M. Ludlow, Barrister-at-Law. London: Ridgway.

In a free country every man is at liberty to think as he can, and to publish his thoughts, provided they do not outrage public decency. Mr. Ludlow, therefore, is fully entitled to put his thoughts into the shape and substance of a book, though it is not very likely he will obtain many readers for it. It is not easy, indeed, to understand what is the object he proposes to effect by this crude and ill-digested publication. He is indignant, as usual, on the subject of past annexations, and pretends that it is the duty as well as the interest of the British Government to restore to their ancient owners the lands and territories of which it has unrighteously possessed itself. There is much more in the same strain, but we are reluctant to pay so poor a compliment to Mr. Ludlow's understanding as to imagine that he is serious in laying down the doctrines he professes to hold. We prefer to think that his book is an elaborate joke, though a very dull one, and that having seen the error of his past ways he is desirous of making some atonement by turning his former opinions into ridicule. In any case, his book is quite harmless, as not one man in a million will have patience to read it right through; and, on the other hand, it has done a certain amount of good in giving employment to the compositors, a highly intelligent and meritorious class of persons.

Cotton Supply. Letter to John Cheetham, Esq., M.P. By J. B. Smith, Esq., M.P.

Mr. Smith's object in publicly addressing the Chairman of the Cotton Supply Association is to draw the attention of English manufacturers to the regular and unfailing supply of the raw material which may be drawn from India. The writer is of opinion that improved river navigation is rather to be desired than lines of railway. In America, he observes, water conveyance is preferred to any other: why, then, should the mighty rivers of India be for ever "allowed to run away to the sea, a mere waste of waters?" Apparently Mr. Smith forgets that it is only at particular seasons these mighty rivers are navigable for any practical purpose, and he certainly gets quite beyond his depth when he ascribes the revolt of the Bengal army to the resumption of lands after the manner of the Enam Commissions. However, he has the pleasure of seeing himself in print.

A Letter addressed to the Right Honourable Lord Viscount Stanley. By John Briggs, F.R.S., Lieut.-general.

The object of this well-timed letter is to place before the constituted authorities the true character of the tenure of land in the Madras Presidency. It is a mistake to suppose that the Government was regarded by the natives, previous to the English conquest, as the owner of the land. The ryots, or cultivators, were divided into three classes, freeholders, copyholders, and tenants-at-will. The English were the first to claim for the State the ownership of the land, a doctrine that levels all occupants of the soil to the condition of tenants. Acting on this ungrounded assumption, the Madras Government has commenced a survey which will occupy some twenty-two years, and cost some £380,000, in order to distribute the 38,000,000 acres under its administration, to persons willing to become its tenants, without reference to proprietary rights. On this difficult and interesting subject General Briggs has written with great clearness and precision, and at this moment his pamphlet will be found particularly useful to both legislators and journalists.

"Mr. Stocquer's former works, and his well-known proficiency in the military sciences, will insure a favourable reception for this very useful book, which possesses the advantage of compressing into one portable volume a vast mass of information on military subjects, arranged especially for reference. No one could be better qualified than Mr. Stocquer for such a task, and certainly he has accomplished it in a very able manner. In a volume which occupies but little room, the officer and soldier may here command at a glance the cream of many valuable works, and obtain information on almost any point of interest. This work, indeed, forms for the camp and barracks what Maundrell's 'Treasury of Knowledge' represents in the counting-house; and we cannot doubt that it will obtain corresponding success."—United Service Magazine.

OFFICES—9, BILLITER-STREET, LONDON.

The Directors give notice, that in consequence of the great and undiminished demand for steam-vessels upon the Indian rivers, and the wide field presenting itself for their profitable employment, they have resolved to double the capital of the Company.

The Directors have the satisfaction of announcing that the steamers and barges, consisting of twelve vessels in all, which they forwarded from this country in August last, have now arrived safely in India, and will commence plying upon the rivers without delay. An equal number of vessels of still greater power is at present in preparation, and will be sent out as soon as possible.

Before embarking in the present undertaking the Directors had not only satisfied themselves of its eminently profitable nature, but they had secured for it the marked co-operation of the Indian Government, by the acquisition of a subsidy; and the Government, both by the gift of land for stations, workshops, and depots, of wood for fuel, and in every other way, has rendered every possible aid to the present undertaking. At the same time, the Directors have insured complete exemption from Government control or interference; and this is the only Company so distinguished which possesses any Government support.

The Directors have the satisfaction of finding that not only the Reports of the Company's servants in India, but the whole concurrent testimony of the advices received from that country, through whatever channel, completely confirms the favourable anticipations they long since formed of the profitable character of the present undertaking. It would be impossible, however, within the limits of an advertisement, to recapitulate the numerous evidences of this truth which the Directors are constantly receiving; and they content themselves, therefore, with giving the following quotation from a recent leading article in the Times, which shows that similar information had been reaching that paper through its Indian correspondents.

"It is not only Government but the whole nation that seems remiss. Any day during the last year we might have filled our columns with the complaints of shipbuilders at the decline of their trade, owing in a great measure to the happy termination of the Russian War. But what do we now hear from India? They wonder there what our shipbuilders are about. Month after month they are expecting the steamers that are to come. 'The Indian General Steam Navigation Company declares this month,' says our correspondent, 'a dividend of 100 and upwards per cent. The Home Government had been requested to send out six river steamers, and it had sent out only one, which, it said, would be enough. Next month,' continues our informant, 'the Indian Government had to engage all the freight of six for two trips at a price which would have bought the new vessels wanted twice over.' There is room and work, we are told, for 300 steamers on the Ganges alone, flowing, as it does, through a territory with a population of 350 to the square mile, with an export trade of £16,000,000, and an internal trade beyond human calculation. Yet, with this vast opening before us, there are found men in the prime of life, neither schoolboys nor d dards, who can waste their time in holding meetings and memorialising Government to find them customers for their shipping. Many a time are this has war ministered to peace, infusing a quicker element into its dreary soul. To this mutiny, perhaps, we owe the real opening of the Indian navigation to British enterprise, and the railways which are certain to follow. But verbum sat; we have said enough to start our shipbuilders and shipowners, if they are Englishmen."

The Directors have all along felt that neither the vessels which they have already sent to India, nor those which they have at present in preparation, could do much to satisfy the great want of Inland Steam Navigation which exists in that country. But they have also all along felt that the only safe way of entering upon such an undertaking was not to rush into it with sanguine precipitation, but to advance with gradual and cautious steps, and without being dazzled by the large prospect of profits it holds out. The first steps, however, having now been successfully taken, the whole of the existing Shares in the Company having been all tted, and being at a premium in the market, and the field being so large as to require a large capital to work it in an efficient manner, the Directors are of opinion that the time is come when the capital of the Company may be advantageously increased, and they have therefore resolved to raise the capital to half a million sterling without delay.

Applications for the new Shares must be forwarded to the Directors, at the Offices of the Company, 9, Billiter-street, London, on or before the 28th day of February next.

A Deposit of 2s. per Share to be made on application, and the Bankers' receipt for that amount to be forwarded with the application for shares.

The New Shareholders will stand on precisely the same terms as the Original Shareholders, and will participate in the dividend so soon as it is payable.

Calls will not be more frequent than once every three months, nor for more than £2 per share, at any one time; 5 per cent. will be paid upon all calls until the dividend is declared and upon all payments in advance of calls.

BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, New Road, London.—MORISON'S VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE

is the only medicine that strikes at the root of all disease. This has been proved by an experience of thirty years, during which time upwards of 400,000 cases of cure have been effected. The Hygienic agents throughout the world are unanimous upon the Hygienic system of medicine introduced by James Morison, the Hygienist, who not only taught the public how to cure their own ailments, but also rescued the world from the dangers of false medical doctrines. The monument lately raised to his memory, by a penny subscription, sufficiently attests the importance of his discoveries.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—DISEASES OF

HOT CLIMATES.—Medical Practitioners have hitherto but too frequently rendered the constitution of the Indian resident still more susceptible of disease by the violence of their remedies. Drastic purgatives and dangerous minerals, which effect temporary good at the expense of lasting evil, have been too commonly resorted to. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS do not debilitate and exhaust the powers of life in any case, or in any disease, or leave any injurious effects behind. They assist and sustain nature while conquering the malady; and by this reinforcement expedite the cure. They are especially efficacious in all bilious disorders, stomaclic derangements, complaints of the kidneys, lungs, and viscera; while in jungle fever and sunstroke they act like a charm.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of chemically prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

Mr. EPHRAIM MOSELY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a thing to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

THE UNIVERSAL REVIEW

(A MONTHLY REVIEW)

OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND SOCIAL SCIENCE.

IN announcing to the public the advent of a new Periodical, the Proprietors do not consider it necessary to vindicate, beforehand, their claim to any exclusive position, or to prove the existence of any special want which it shall be their aim to satisfy. They prefer at once to brave the charge of self-complacency, and to say they have determined on addressing the world, because they believe they can persuade the world to listen to them. By way of preface, however, they think it right to offer a few explanatory remarks on the several departments of Politics, Literature, and Social Science, which will month by month pass under review.

In the POLITICAL DEPARTMENT, their attention will be directed to the co-ordination of popular measures with the maintenance of the true conservative principles. They have firm faith in the excellence of the Constitution under which they live. But between those who would preserve it by a periodical re-adjustment of its parts according to the various requirements of successive epochs, and those who believe that its machinery as designed at the Revolution is adapted for all time, there is an essential and a practical difference. It is under the banner of the first-mentioned class of Conservatives that the Proprietors of the UNIVERSAL REVIEW profess to enrol themselves; and they are happy in the conviction that the Government which at present administers the destinies of this country will be found to regulate their policy by the principles of constitutional progress.

In FOREIGN AFFAIRS the Proprietors will recommend an attitude of vigilant neutrality, in the belief that the people of this country now recognise as an historical fact that British interference in the affairs of Continental nations is productive of but little good; and that the resources of Great Britain will be expended more beneficially to herself and others in maintaining inviolate the asylum which she affords to political sufferers than in seeking to promote their cause by a policy of aggressing. To this end, however, it is absolutely necessary that our naval and military establishments should be kept in the highest possible state of efficiency, and papers relating to this subject will form a prominent feature in the UNIVERSAL REVIEW.

In all ECCLESIASTICAL QUESTIONS the Church of England will receive an earnest and affectionate support; and whenever her position and accidents may come under the consideration of the Legislature, the integrity of her constitution and the sanctity of her ancient creed will be firmly and vigorously upheld.

During the PARLIAMENTARY SESSION an article will appear in each number containing a condensation of the month's debates, with such comments as may serve to elucidate the topics of the day. Particular questions will occasionally be discussed separately and at greater length, but it is not anticipated that articles of this special character will be of frequent occurrence. The great public meetings that are held during the recess, and which constitute in themselves a kind of irregular Parliament, will also be treated according to their interest and importance.

In LITERATURE, the method which the Proprietors of the UNIVERSAL REVIEW intend to pursue is easily indicated. In this department they would feel still less difficulty, were they so inclined, in defining a peculiar field for their exertions. It would be possible to mark out a distinction which should separate their treatment of books and subjects, on the one hand, from the brevity and haste to which newspaper articles are necessarily liable; and, on the other, from the infrequency of publication that attaches to the regular quarterly organs of literature, and which so often prevents them from delivering their judgment, however valuable and conclusive, until the topic has been well nigh exhausted by earlier or less weighty writers. From the monthly magazines, with which they might seem likely to come into still closer competition, they might claim to be distinguished by the fact of their Review being primarily intended for critical purposes, and not—except in very rare instances—as a repository of the lighter class of articles that form the staple of most monthly periodicals. But in this respect, also, they prefer to rest their claims for public support on the broader and simpler grounds indicated in the opening paragraph. The progress of Foreign Literature will be duly noted in their columns, and all foreign works of interest introduced as speedily as possible to the knowledge of their readers.

The large class of subjects which are at present somewhat vaguely comprehended under the title of SOCIAL SCIENCE, will be carefully and conscientiously analysed in the UNIVERSAL REVIEW. But as that "Science" is obviously in its infancy, any discussions based upon it must at present be rather experimental than judicial. On the Philosophy of Society—supposing that such a philosophy exists—and on questions of social and sanitary reform, upon which so many able authorities are so widely at variance, it would be premature to promise anything like final or exhaustive treatment. It is proposed, however, under this head, to take due notice of the meetings that may be held, or the books that may be written on these and cognate subjects, and to sum up from time to time the most trustworthy results that may seem to have been attained in the progress of public opinion or of individual thought.

The signal success which has in France attended upon an experiment of a similar nature to the present, encourages the hope that a Periodical distinguished by a like preponderance of the critical element, combined with the advantage which the able conductors of the Revue des deux Mondes unfortunately do not enjoy—that of free political discussion—may meet with a support, to the consolidation of which its proprietors promise that no exertion shall be wanting, either on their part or on that of their contributors.

It is requested that all Advertisements, Books for Review, and Communications for the Editor may be addressed to the care of MESSRS. GABRIEL, the old-established DENTISTS. Patentees of the System for Insuring Perfect ARTICULATION and MASTICATION, without the impediments usually attendant upon the ordinary plans.

In their IMPROVED MINERAL TEETH and FLEXIBLE GUMS there are no springs or wires, no extraction of roots; the fit is of the most unerring accuracy, while, from the flexibility of the agent employed, pressure upon the gums or remaining teeth is entirely avoided. It is permanent, wholesome, and congenial to the mouth, and, when in use, defies the notice of the closest observer. It is only necessary to see them to be convinced of their superiority; and unless every satisfaction is given, no fee is accepted.

The best materials are used, which Messrs. GABRIEL are enabled to supply at prices lower than are usually charged for common qualities, they having on the premises extensive laboratories for the manufacture of every speciality appertaining to the profession. Consultation gratis. Established 1804; and at 131, Duke-street, Liverpool.

GABRIEL'S TREATISE fully explains the system, and may be had gratis, for stamped envelope.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Calcutta Mail of the 23rd January confirms the intelligence already received as to the suppression of the rebellion in Oude. The Begum and the Nana have crossed the borders, and fled into the fastnesses of the Nepaulese territories. Unable to follow them any further, the Commander-in-Chief left a sufficient force to prevent their return to the British provinces, and then proceeded to Lucknow, where he arrived on the 17th January. The Indian papers are unanimous in speaking of his lordship's intention to bid an early farewell to India, and it seems to be equally agreed on all hands that Bombay will be the port of embarkation for Europe.

The pacification of Oude appears to be advancing very satisfactorily. The talookdaree system is being partially restored, with such modifications as were rendered necessary to adapt it to the altered circumstances of the province, or rather to its improved form of government. The disarmament of the people was being prosecuted with tact and firmness, though it will never be possible to prevent the concealment of a goodly supply of weapons.

A band of fugitives, expelled from Nepal through the loyalty of Jung Bahadoor to the British alliance, having made an inroad into the district of Rohilkund, were encountered by the 42nd Highlanders and driven across the Gogra, with the loss of their four guns and a considerable number of slain. They are described, however, as having offered a stouter resistance than has been their practice of late, and consequently fifty-five men and four officers are reported to have been wounded.

No further tidings have reached us of the movements of Tautia Topee and the Delhi Shahzada. Brigadier Showers inflicted severe chastisement on these ubiquitous fugitives on the 16th January, and compelled them to consult their safety in a yet more rapid and disorderly flight. It is much to be desired that this guerilla warfare may be brought to an early termination, for not only does it tend to harass and disorganise the regular troops, but it is still more pernicious in keeping the country in a ferment, and preventing the people from returning to pacific pursuits.

Lady Canning arrived in Calcutta on the 19th January, alive and well. The Viceroy, having left Allahabad on the 20th, was expected at the Presidency on the 24th.

Sir John Lawrence had taken his passage in the steamer of the 12th April, but it was considered probable that his presence would be required in India to a later date.

It will be seen elsewhere that the Indian Government has acknowledged in handsome terms the services rendered by the "Pearl Brigade," under the command of Capt. Sotheby, R.N.

From China the only interesting item of news refers to Lord Elgin's return to Shanghai. His Excellency had proceeded up the Yangtze-Kiang as far as Hankow. The sudden fall of the river had compelled him to leave H.M.'s steamers Furious and Cruiser at a point four hundred and sixty miles from Shanghai. Three gunboats, however, were about to join them, with provisions and stores.

At Canton, or rather in the immediate vicinity of the town, there has been some more fighting. On the 8th January a large gathering of "Braves" attacked a body of 700 British troops, who were exercising on the hills, but were speedily repulsed, with the loss of a few men. Three days later General Straubenzee marched out with a force of 2,000 men, and, after some skirmishing, destroyed a village and killed a small number of the "Braves." It is said that the latter are secretly encouraged by instructions from Peking.

BENGAL.

THE LATE REBELLION.

Our interest in the war is fast fading away, and the drama which was so exciting last year now ceases to attract. The enemy have but one star figuring on the stage, Tantia Topee, who is playing out the play with much ability; while all those who were stars on our side have set, and their once familiar names descended into obscurity. Every one is heartily tired of the war, and few now care to read the telegrams which daily inundate us, for they are generally but records of events of little importance. Even from Oude, no news can come able to rouse us from our apathy, because we know very well there can be no more struggling for mastery in that country, as our force so preponderates over that of any enemy which may still exist, that to crush them, if they venture on the field, is as easy an operation as to catch them when they flee would be difficult. The war is virtually over, and the services of the policeman are now of more consequence than those of the soldier. In fact, the soldier's rightful occupation is gone, and his future business will be chiefly to quell local disturbances, and to apprehend doubtful characters on the requisition of the civil authorities. If the amnesty has been generally accepted in Oude, we have really but a handful of men in arms against us elsewhere, and these men are on their last legs, and would be but too glad to be allowed to surrender on condition of their lives being spared. In a month or six weeks we have no doubt a proclamation will be promulgated proclaiming peace and good-will towards all men, and declaring India restored to its pristine state of order and quiet—advising all those who have rebelled against our authority to return to their homes and resume their usual occupations free from molestation, and promising that no inquiry into their late conduct shall be instituted if they do so; while our generals will be ordered to sheath their swords, and be deprived of the power of originating any military movement, save at the instance of civil commissioners and magistrates! These will hereafter tell the soldiers where to march and when to fight, and the generals and brigadiers will become as before, but superior kind of drill-sergeants, maintaining discipline and efficiency in their corps, but with no power beyond the limits of their cantonments. This policy, we think, will not be safe for a long time to come, for however orderly and loyal our Indian fellow-subjects may appear—stricken as they have been—yet there are certain localities in which these appearances are deceitful, and where an artful and ambitious ringleader might excite them to rebellion, especially in those places, and there are many (even in this neighbourhood), that abound in numerous gangs of turbulent vagabonds, ever ready to take advantage of commotions, and who having lately enjoyed the delights of plunder, and escaped the necessity of work, will be always prepared at a moment's notice to engage blindly in any enterprise which may enable them to resume this occupation. Besides scoundrels of this class, there are others equally ready to profit by disorder, and prepared to follow any lawless leader—such, for instance, as the dismissed followers of native princes, men whose hatred to us, or, more properly speaking, love of loot, tended to compromise the character of their masters, and in many instances caused their fidelity to us to be doubted. There are one or two states not far off, in which there are crowds of men of this stamp—in one state, indeed, Dholepore, it is no secret that the chief so mistrusted his own troops, and with good reason, that his territory is now protected by the troops of his kinsmen, the Rajpoots.

Under the circumstances described, we are of opinion that the chief authority in every suspected state should be the senior military officer, to whom every Government official should be subordinate. We should like to see military commissioners generally appointed where they are needed. There is already one in Rajpootana, and we see with what vigour he, not being associated or subordinate to local civil authority, manages the affairs of the states under his immediate charge, and represses on the instant every attempt at disorder.—Mofussilite.

OUR RELATIONS WITH PERSIA.

Nothing perhaps indicates more clearly the real change which has passed over India than a line in a recent telegram. "Our diplomacy with Persia will be managed by the Secretary for India." That innovation has been advocated and resisted for years. One of the last acts of Lord Dalhousie was to place on record his sense of the false position occupied in this matter by the Indian Government. All Persian questions are primarily Indian questions. Our relations with that country, but for India, could never become hostile. Our trade with her, but for the Indian navy, could scarcely have an existence. In all serious disputes the executive force employed is that of the Indian Government. All wars are conducted by our officers, rendered successful by the devotion of our resources. India is condemned always to pay half the bill, and may congratulate herself that she is not required to liquidate the whole. And yet, with all this dependance on Indian assistance, the Indian Government, whose diplomacy, whatever its defects, has at least a habit of success, is shut out from the negotiations. During the last war Lord Canning, though asked to denude India for a Persian expedition, was powerless even to advise, whether on the prosecution of the war, or the fitting moment for a peace. All despatches were sent to the Foreign-office, all orders received from Lord Clarendon, all nominations made by the Cabinet at home. The Foreign-office would bear no Indian interference. Persian questions, they averred, were too delicate, touched too many European interests, to be settled save by the Minister responsible for our foreign policy. The department would work without Indian advice; and we had, therefore, a peace which settled a personal squabble, and left Herat still an international difficulty.

The abolition of the Company has changed all this. The real ruler of India is at last a Minister of State, and, as a Minister, he may manage our relations with Persia. He has just as large a share as his colleagues in European politics, has just as keen an interest in the position of England in the world. The only difference is, that being responsible for India as well as for Mr. Murray, he will reflect deeply before he taxes an Empire to maintain the affronted dignity of an Envoy. Nor with an Indian army to reorganise will he be very ready to believe that Cabul and not Croustad is the point at which Russia may most easily be struck. Accustomed, too, to estimate Indian opinion, he will scarcely throw aside a minute of the Governor-General as a paper perhaps impertinent and certainly out of form.

The only danger we see in the innovation is one which follows every attempt to link India more closely to the imperial system. If Calcutta is to be the focus of Asiatic diplomacy—and the reasoning which applies to Persia will apply to China and the Archipelago—is Indian finance to bear the burden of Asiatic wars? It bears part of them already. We paid half the cost of the first China war; half the expense of the last Persian expedition. Are we in future to provide the whole? That question will of course be answered by an indignant negative; but promises are of little value when opposed to permanent interests. We know of no temptation stronger than that which will impel any Cabinet, Whig or Tory matters nothing, to fling the cost of its Asiatic policy on the Indian revenue. That course makes things so smooth. There is excitement for the British public, reputation for British statesmen, room for British heroes, and British hangers on, despatches for British newspapers, even, it may be, important advantages for British trade, and nothing to pay. No income-tax adds the force of a personal grievance to interpellations from her Majesty's Opposition. No increase of duties tempts merchants to inquire whether the war be after all aggressive or just. "Public works are stopped" for a year or two, an extra million or so is added to the Indian debt, and John Bull enjoys his victory without a pang. The temptation, let statesmen talk as they may, will not be slight, and it will be well if, with the new power conceded to the Indian Cabinet, Parliament can enforce also a new responsibility.—Friend of India.

THE REORGANISATION OF THE ARMY.

This day three weeks Parliament meets for the despatch of business, and we are not without hope that after the Charles-and-Georges affair has been explained, and the Reform Bill has been discussed ad nauseam, and three personal explanations have been demanded, and a dozen party manoeuvres have failed, and the nation and its leaders are nearly wearied out, some member may ask some question as to the position of the Indian Army. It has been grievously neglected. For twenty months some two thousand gentlemen, all servants of the State, all risking their lives in actual warfare, or still worse, waiting with unflinching hearts for the day when it should please their superiors to murder them, have been treated almost as criminals, certainly as men possessing no claim to consideration or respect. In England, the neglect of a single officer is often matter for Parliamentary debate, the smallest slight put upon a class of officers rouses the most bitter recrimination. In India, the officers of an entire army are left for twenty months in doubt as to their status, their duties, their prospects, and even their pay. If the Bengal officers had no other claim upon their countrymen, their patient expectation for the past year would establish one of no slight weight. They have scarcely even murmured. Singularly ready under most circumstances to appeal to the pen, they have in this instance maintained a not unbecoming reticence. More excitement was displayed about the furlough question, ten times as much about the half batta, as has been manifested in a crisis which involves their entire future. The matter it was felt could be decided only by England, and they were content to await the decision of the Crown. This very patience, however, entitles them all the more to courtesy, and to the prompt attention which as yet they have signally failed to receive.

Not the slightest notice has been taken of their position, and but for the kindly thought of Mr. Willoughby, whose last effort in Parliament was to insert a clause in the regulating Act, protecting them from dismissal or loss of pension, they might still be doubtful even of their bread. Not an order has been issued, not a promise given, not a hint allowed to transpire as to their future position. In India a plan for a committee of reorganisation, at first languidly entertained, was permitted to die out. Colonel Durand was ordered to ask a few questions, and then sent home to tell Lord Ellenborough and the Home Committee where the difficulties lay. At home, there has been no energy to put to shame the habitual dilatoriness of India. Lord Stanley, prompt to sternness on most points, is on this accessible to influences. Though probably as well qualified as any man in England to decide the general question—which is one of politics and not of pipe clay—and though certain to give a final vote in the matter, he has suffered a Committee of Ancients to be enrolled. It contains some eminent names. At least two first-class soldiers sit upon the Board. But the Queen's officers present do not know India, and the Indian officers only know India before the mutinies. That knowledge for practical purposes is about as valuable as information concerning the Vedic period. India has lived a century in a twelvemonth, and the France of Louis XIV. is not more different from the France of Louis XVIII. than the India of Lord Hardinge from the India of to-day. Even this Committee seems to hesitate as to its report. It has been sitting six months. Each of its decisions involves the fortunes of hundreds, and secrecy under such circumstances is an impossibility. That the secret has been kept is a proof, therefore, that there is no secret to betray, that no decision has been made, no plan matured. Expectancy is still to be the normal condition of the Indian Army.

Even this delay, though more harassing to soldiers than a campaign, may be borne, provided one other blunder be not made. It is a reference to India which the army has now to dread. The natural course is to send out the plan for Indian opinions, return it, polish it finally, and then, and not till then, act. Such a course shifts responsibility from the Ministers, evades Parliamentary discussion, and seems personally courteous to the Governor-General. But it involves at least two years of delay. Business has never been so slowly transacted in India as at present. Every reference, small or great, on the government of a province or a grant of leave, is delayed. A question so gigantic as that of reorganisation would undoubtedly not be more rapidly disposed of, and we have not forgotten that police reform remained one entire year in the box of one member of Council. It would be well if the plan reached home before the Tories were out of power, and a new set of ideas in the ascendant. This is the present danger to be dreaded, and it rests with Lord Stanley to avoid the rock. He has ample information at his command. All Horse Guards' information exists upon the spot. Sufficient Indian information can be found among the officers swarming home. He is beyond the pressure of personal interests, and it is by him, acting alone, and responsible only to Parliament, that the re-organisation should be decided. Let us have a despatch peremptorily settling all but details, leaving no room for reference, admitting no alternative but obedience or resignation, and even the harassing delays of the past year will not have been endured in vain. It is the strong will of a dictator, not the finesse of intriguing statesmen that India now demands.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WESTERN BANK OF SCOTLAND.—Mr. Moncrieff has published an appeal to the charitable in India on behalf of many Scotch ladies ruined by the failure of the Western Bank. Not only has their property been swept away, but calls have been made on them to three times the value of their shares. As usual in such cases, many of the shareholders are poor gentlewomen, some of whom are now without even the means of obtaining food. Subscriptions are received in Calcutta, by Mr. R. S. Moncrieff, Bank of Bengal, Rev. J. C. Herdman, Camac-street, and others.

COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE.—Private J. MacDonald, of the 3rd Bombay Europeans, has been tried at Jhansie for abusing his commanding officer, Capt. Whitehill, calling him a coward, and other abusive names. He had been previously sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and the court now awarded fifty lashes and two years more. The Commander-in-Chief disapproved the latter part of the sentence, and directed the release of the man in July, 1859. Discipline must be maintained, but long periods of imprisonment are certainly a bad way of maintaining it.

A JOB'S COMFORTER.—The Bombay Gazette states that in the little skirmish of Pertabghur Tantia Topee fired copper pice for want of ammunition. His powder, too, appeared to be poor stuff. The latter statement is not very intelligible, unless Tantia has fallen on some English powder manufactured for export; but the former is not pleasant information for the pursuers. Nothing is worse than a wound from a copper bullet.

TROOPS IN CHINA.—A correspondent of the Englishman says, "the European troops in Canton have petitioned for the same pay and allowances as their comrades employed in India. They have been told in reply that they will receive six months' Indian pay and allowances, beside prize-money. The latter will not be distributed among the native troops, as they were too late for the capture of the city."

HINDOO FATHERS.—The Hurkaru notices that in the district of Monghyr it is not uncommon for Hindoo fathers to sell their sons to Mahomedans, to serve as eunuchs. The fee paid is about three rupees, and the transaction is regularly entered in the Caze's register. The transaction was discovered by Mr. Toogood, and the parties have received "an inadequate punishment" from the Sudder. It is almost a miracle that they received any at all, and that Mr. Toogood escaped without rebuke. The Sudder has already decreed that the sale of children for prostitution is a proper practice, and why not for mutilation?

VULTURES.—The Bombay Gazette mentions that there are at present eight practising barristers and twenty-four attorneys in the Presidency. In Calcutta, by the latest lists, there are some twenty barristers and seventy attorneys.

ASIATIC SOCIETY OF CALCUTTA.—At the annual meeting of the Asiatic Society, Mr. A. Grote was elected President of the Asiatic Society, in place of Sir J. Colville, who is about to retire. The Council announced that the society had lost thirty-four members during the last two years, and during 1858 added only two names to the list, which now contains only ninety-three paying members. This is the natural result of a system wholly at variance with the circumstances of the day. New members will not join a society which punishes entrance by a fine of Rs. 100, and demands Rs. 64 a year, without any equivalent. The society, however, is determined to maintain its exclusiveness; it will not even remit the entrance fee, and, like all close corporations, it must gradually expire.

THE DRUNKARD'S PARADISE.—The Phoenix mentions that all the grog-shops in the suburbs of Calcutta are to be closed at five o'clock. The measure is a very partial one, though useful as far as it goes. The true way to check drunkenness is to tax it. It is at this moment possible for any man in Calcutta to get drunk for one penny. If the liquor were taxed till no one could get drunk under one shilling, drunkenness would decrease one-half, and Calcutta might have a magnificent municipal revenue.

POTTERS' CLAY.—Mr. William Swain, Railway Engineer, informs the Hurkaru that excellent clay for stone pottery exists in India. The pottery may be applied to Telegraph insulators, paving for platforms of Railway stations—verandahs, coping for bridges, stone walls,—jars, &c. &c., and many other purposes too numerous to mention. Cheap paving tiles, and cheap roofing are the two present necessities of Indian builders.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has apparently succeeded admirably in its attempts to drive away depositors. According to the weekly statement, the total amount of deposits is less than thirty-two thousand pounds, or one-thirtieth of the capital,—and this in a city with a trade of twenty millions, and in a bank invested with the right of issuing notes which, being accepted in all treasuries, are practically legal tender.

CHARACTER AN OBJECT.—A home is to be founded in Calcutta for young Englishwomen of good character, who may be out of employment. Of all cities on earth Calcutta is perhaps the worst for such a class, and they are becoming numerous.

AN UNNECESSARY NOTICE.—The following notice has been issued by the East Indian Railway Company. "The Secretary of State in Council for the affairs of India, having called for the co-operation of the different Indian railway companies to prevent the ill-treatment of native workmen by their European superiors, the undersigned hereby notifies to the Company's servants in general, that any instance of such, in which the act cannot be justified as one of self-defence, will involve the dismissal of the offender, who will be handed over to the authorities, to be dealt with according to law. The Company's engineers are requested to give publicity to this amongst their subordinates." The notice is scarcely required. Any native workman ill-treated is at liberty to quit, or, if he chooses, to summon his employer.

ENGLISH COMMON LAW.—"The objection to the diffusion of the English law is, not that such a measure would be unpopular, but that in those parts of India where our rule is not so firmly established as it is here, a system of law so elaborate would trammel the executive power too much." In the non regulation provinces, perhaps, but not in the regulation, English statute law has of late become favourable to liberty, but the common law is in a high degree a prerogative law. It would, in fact, be a very oppressive law, but for the mildness with which it is worked. For instance, scarcely a Rajah in India would escape the law of constructive treason for his acts in 1857. The boldest friends of resumption have never ventured on a law so strong as that contained in the principle nullum tempus occurrit regi. No Indian revenue law is so severe as the old law of King's dues, which, though mildly worked, enables the Board of Inland Revenue to crush a defaulter at a stroke.

GOVERNMENT MESSENGERS.—The Phoenix mentions that the Government of India has increased the salaries of the peons employed in the public offices of Calcutta. There are 5,968 peons in all, who receive pay ranging from Rs. 4 to Rs. 9 a month. They plead for higher wages, and it has been resolved to pay them, one-third at the rate of Rs. 6, and the remainder at Rs. 5 a month. The rates are moderate as compared with wages in Calcutta, but the number employed seems preposterous. Imagine five entire regiments of messengers, all of them acting practically as footmen and ticket porters. What is the total number in Bengal?

NOT VERY LIKELY.—A correspondent of the Englishman makes the following extraordinary statement:—"There is at present a new rule in force both here and at Allahabad affecting persons who travel by railway in a most inconvenient way. It is this, that no person, civilian or military, man, woman or child, white or black, can travel by the railway till he or she has obtained first of all a ticket of permission to do so from either the senior civilian or the brigadier, in the case of whites, and from the postmaster in the case of blacks who wish to travel as third class passengers." The story is incredible. Government has neither the right nor the power to destroy the Railway profits after this fashion.

GREEN INDIGO.—The Agri-Horticultural Society mention in their last report that they have a large supply of the green indigo plant on hand. The price of the dye produced from this plant has of late been rising rapidly, till in France it has reached Rs. 135 per pound.

DESTRUCTION OF MAPS.—The Englishman says that some forty-six thousand copies of maps have been destroyed by the rebels. They must all be replaced, and there are neither stones nor draughtsmen sufficient for the work. Stones can be imported from Bombay, and draughtsmen ought to be procurable both there and at Madras.

A ROYAL INSOLVENT.—At the sitting of the Calcutta Insolvent Court on the 8th January, Nuwab Gohar Ali applied to be relieved of his debts. This person is one of the descendants of Tippoo Sultan, and owes Rs. 1,25,968; assets nil. His stipend is Rs. 1,000 a month, which barely maintains him. We thought all members of this family were exempt from civil arrest.

MILITARY POLICE.—The following is from a Resolution of the Governor-General:—"The military police has now reached nearly to its full strength, and is prepared to undertake all the duties for which it was organised. It has hitherto been necessary, in consequence of the unsettled state of the country, to maintain the district police unaltered, in addition to the military police, but the returning tranquillity of these provinces (north-western provinces) will soon render it possible to dispense with a portion of the district police, and it becomes necessary now to determine what that portion shall be, as well as the constitution of the remaining portion. It is also necessary to lay down some standard to guide the commandants of military police in supplying guards." The chief points for consideration will be the following: "1st—As regards the civil police, it will be necessary to inquire to what extent the military police will relieve the civil police of the duties hitherto devolving upon them, and the extent to which the civil police may in consequence be reduced in number. The military police will for the future undertake, and will be responsible for the general protection of the community from outrage and violence. On the civil police will still devolve exclusively the detection of crime, and the miscellaneous duties connected with the police administration. Besides the numerical reduction of the police, it will further have to be considered whether any change is expedient in the constitution of the portion which is left for detective and miscellaneous business, whether the old class of Burkundaze are sufficient for this purpose, or whether any new agency should be constituted in order to secure the efficient performance of the important functions of the detective police. A sketch will, therefore, be necessary of the number of persons proper to be employed under the new system, with their duties and salaries, for a large and heavy thannah, and also for a second class or light thannah. The establishments proper for first and second class outposts will also come under consideration, and likewise how far the city police will be relieved by the military police, and what retrenchments and changes may be necessary there. Similar inquiries will be extended to the Tehsildaree guards and Chaprassees. As they will henceforth be relieved of all watch and escort duty, their numbers will be susceptible of considerable reduction. The military police will supply guards of offices and personal guards whenever such are necessary. It must be considered whether it will be sufficient simply to retrench the guards which are now entered in the accounts, or whether it will not be necessary to revise the general establishments of chaprassees and burkundazes now attached to offices, portions of such establishments, though not borne in the rolls as guards, being employed on that duty. Secondly.—As regards the military police, the commissioner of military police has submitted that at present he has no option but to meet the call of district officers and others for parties of whatever extent demanded, either as escorts or as stationary guards at Tehsildarees, Thannahs, &c. It is necessary that a scale should be laid down, fixing the ordinary guards and parties to be supplied for various duties. This scale would be applicable to districts where tranquillity prevails. It would not be intended to restrict the discretion of commissioners and district officers, exercised in responsibility to Government, in requiring stronger guards or parties under exceptional circumstance." The scale should embrace the following details:—"Strength of guard for an ordinary Tehsildaree. Strength of guard for an ordinary Thannah. Escort to be ordinarily furnished with treasure, with reference to the sum transported. Strength of guard for a central jail and for an ordinary district jail. Strength of guard for general and for local treasuries. Offices to be supplied with guards, and the strength of such guards. Officers entitled to personal guards and the strength of such guards. Guards to be furnished to officers while on circuit in their districts or divisions." For the purpose of considering and reporting upon the various points above ad-verted to, a committee will be assembled at Agra, composed of the following members:—"The Judges of the Sudder Court. The senior member of the Sudder Board, with the Board's secretary, who will also be secretary to the Committee. The commissioner of Agra, the judge of Agra, the accountant and the magistrate of Agra. A similar committee will be assembled at Allahabad—consisting of the commissioner and inspector general of jails, Mr. C. C. Bailey, the commissioner of military police, the magistrate of Allahabad. The several commissioners of divisions will be called upon to furnish their opinion on the questions laid down in this resolution."—Englishman.

CONVERTS v. MISSIONARIES.—The war of classes extends in Calcutta. After exhausting itself on interlopers and officials in India, it has now broken out against the missionaries. The native converts are beginning to find their opportunity of speaking out, and a growl has long been heard from the natives who come in contact with the missionary. The mode in which they monopolise all the patronage, the management of funds, the refusal to listen to the opinions of their black brethren, had given great offence; at last one clergyman has spoken out. The Rev. Lal Biharee Day, a convert of the missionaries of the Free Church of Scotland, who admitted him to holy orders, has preached a sermon on the faults of missionaries; one that reads well, and to exoteric understanding is most Christian like. Whatever the esoteric meaning may be, if there is any, our lay judgment cannot reach, but taking it simply for what it appears to say, we learn that the native converts complain of the arrogance of the missionary as one of the conquering class. He points to the fact that their conduct in general and unchristian position of conquerors is one of the principal causes of the non-success of their mission. The missionaries have never touched upon this point, but have sought for causes among their Christian compatriots.—Englishman.

SECOND THOUGHTS.—To the Mily. Secy., &c., &c., Hd. Qrs.—Camp Etiah, 1st Nov., 1858.—Sir,—I regret to find that I have inadvertently forgotten to mention the name of Major Martin, of the 4th irr. cavalry, in my despatch of the operations of the cavalry brigade from the commencement of the mutiny up to the time the army was joined by Sir Colin Campbell, now Lord Clyde, in Oude. On the 19th June, 1857, when a severe action was fought by the troops at Delhi, Maj. Martin was placed by me in command of a force of European and native cavalry, which were employed in supporting two guns under command of Lieut. Bishop, Bengal horse artillery. Maj. Martin was with these guns during the whole action, under a very heavy fire, and brought his force from the field after the conclusion of the fight. I have the honour to request you will do me the favour to lay this before the right hon. the commander-in-chief, and I trust, should it meet with his approval, that it may be forwarded on to the Horse Guards. I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient servant, J. HOPE GRANT, Major-General, commanding Oude force.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE UNCOVENANTED FUND have proposed two modifications in their rules. At present the maximum rate of pension which can be purchased for a son is Rs. 50 a month, and the pension ceases when he is eighteen. The directors remark that competition has now so far taken the place of patronage, that a thorough education has become of great value. Such education cannot be obtained at so early an age, or at a cost so carefully limited. They, therefore, propose to extend the time to twenty-one years, and the maximum rate to Rs. 80 a month. The proposition, like everything which emanates from this fund, is clear-headed and practical; but why limit the sum to be purchased? If the rates are fixed on sound principles, the amount bought can make no difference.

FLAX FROM INDIA.—Messrs. D. Dewar, Son, and Sons, of Manchester, in a circular quoted by the Bombay Gazette, mention that the deficiency in the supply of flax creates some alarm in the linen trade. The manufacturers point to India as the best source of supply, and propose to form an association resembling an association existing in the wool trade. This body would send out machinery and men to teach the natives. How long will it be before Manchester learns that the only true plan is to send out cultivators, men with capital to take land, and send home the produce? That is the way indigo has been produced, and is the only method in which cultivation can be quickly extended. The natives will take up a profitable trade, but they regard European "instruction" in such matters as we should regard the instruction of Feejeeans.

SYMPTOMS OF WEAKNESS.—The Governor General has ordered that all letters addressed by native soldiers in the Punjab, or serving out of their own presidency, to their wives and families, shall pass free. It is amusing to watch the steps by which the old franking system is again being introduced.

THE INDIAN MINTS.—In the month of November, 1858, silver was coined in Calcutta to the value of Rs. 24,76,169; in Madras, Rs. 2,10,000; and in Bombay, 10,00,000.

TAKING TO IT KINDLY.—"A Sedee, by name Abdoel, was hanged on the morning of the 20th January, on the south of the Alipore Jail, for the murder of his wife. The wretched culprit seemed eager to ascend the scaffold, by constantly lifting up his hand to the rope, and on the arrival of the magistrate, without the least hesitation, he mounted the ladder; and without allowing the hangman to put the rope round his neck, voluntarily thrust his head through it, when the noose was adjusted, and the bolt drawn; he expired almost instantly."

THE RAJAH OF PANNA in the Punjab, who advanced to the British Government the sum of fifty thousand rupees, for the purpose of paying our troops, during the great monetary crisis in the Punjab, has requested the Government to invest the said sum of money, which will shortly fall due, in the new 5 per cent. loan, subject to the provisions of the Notification, dated February, 1857.

GOVERNMENT PHOTOGRAPHY.—It is but two years since we (Hurkaru) noticed that a blow had been struck to the keranee monopoly, by the introduction of printing by Mr. T. Jones, the indefatigable register of the Bengal secretariat, into the home department. Captain Young, the officiating chief engineer, has now suggested that all maps, plans, &c., may in future be photographed, instead of continuing the tardy and laborious system of drawing now in vogue in his own, and in the different government offices, and recommended the employment of photographers: we see no reason why this important branch should not be introduced, in supercession to the drawing department employed at the several offices, being preferable both as regards time, accuracy, and expense. Some difficulty may be occasioned in obtaining competent photographers; the Public Works Department will, we believe, supply this deficiency best.

SUPREME COURT FEES.—We (Hurkaru) have received a copy of a new Table of Fees to be charged in the office of the Master of the Supreme Court, which has been just issued, and is to take effect from the 6th Jan. We do not think it necessary to print the table at length, but we notice it, because the changes which it introduces are, we believe, expected to reduce the receipts of the Master's office by nearly one-fourth. The fees received by the Supreme Court annually are very large, and they have now for many years been all paid over by the Court direct to Government. It is a great public benefit that has been gained by the reduction now made, and Sir James Colville deserves all credit for having suggested it, and seen it fairly carried out before his retirement. The court fees still remain very heavy, but it is satisfactory to know that the Government tax upon suitors will henceforth be less than it has been; and we are not without hopes that some further movements in the same direction may yet be made.

H.M.'s 87TH.—A correspondent of an Indian paper, writing from Buxar, January 13th, states that H.M.'s 87th regiment is under orders for England, after nearly seventeen years' service in this country, the last two of which have been actively employed against the rebels. On the 11th instant they were reviewed by Brigadier Douglas, C.B., commanding the Shahabad district. On this occasion their muster was 477 rank and file. After being inspected in line, they went through the usual evolutions, and the Brigadier expressed not only his satisfaction, but his surprise at finding the men in so efficient a state of discipline, considering that they had been scattered through the district for many weeks, and but lately collected together. He also expressed a hope that he should find many of them volunteering into his own regiment (79th Highlanders). He complimented the men on their conduct in quarters, and observed it was the more remarkable as the regiment was equally conspicuous in the field as they had been a terror to the sepoys.

PROGRESS IN PERSIA.—The following is from a letter dated Ispahan, December 17th, 1858. The winter had set in with great severity, and a heavy fall of snow. The comet shone with great brilliancy the whole of October, but has now disappeared. The people, who are sunk in superstition, say that it foretells wars, famine, pestilence, and divers other afflictions. The Persians are certainly one of the most superstitious nations on the face of the earth. All articles of consumption are cheap and plentiful, the harvest having been unusually abundant. Lithographic presses have been established both at Ispahan and at Teheran, and several useful school books have been published. Thousands of the Koran and Haddis are on sale in heaps, but few purchase, few read, and still fewer understand these books. A small work on electric telegraphs will be shortly published in Persian.—Hurkaru.

ANDAMAN ISLANDS.—Ross Island and Chatham Island, and several bays have been cleared; vegetables of all sorts have been planted, and appear to thrive. Paddy has been cultivated with good prospects of a plentiful crop, and wheat, gram, &c., have been sown. About 2,000 convicts have arrived in the settlements, and, at present, of these 1,400 remain alive. The remaining 600 have been cleared off by sickness, desertions, and executions. Some few have received pardons, and have returned to India. The climate appears to be extremely hostile to them, but much of the sickness is probably attributable to the exposure consequent on landing in a place where no efficient shelter could be provided extemporaneously; more is probably due to the mental depression under which most of them appear to suffer on first arrival. It is curiously enough remarked by the natives, that sickness is more fatal among those transported for terms than the life convicts. They are allowed to engage in their respective callings. Those who have none receive pay at two annas per day, labourers clearing jungle and making roads, &c. Shoemakers, tailors, basket-makers, carpenters, &c., &c., support themselves, by their trades, making what they can. Great inducements have been held out to the families of the prisoners to join them, and it is anticipated that not a few will avail themselves of the liberty offered. The wild pig is the only quadruped hitherto met with. The hostility of the natives continues the same as ever. It is believed that they have murdered every single convict who escaped, and did not return to the settlement.—Moulmain Advertiser.

THE CATHOLIC BISHOP OF CALCUTTA.—The farewell pastoral address of Dr. Olliffe, Catholic bishop of Calcutta, was read to his various congregations on Sunday, the 16th January. Although only recently returned from a sea trip, the bishop's health is still failing, and he has been advised to leave this country for a time, and try a more complete change of scene and climate. Dr. Olliffe will be regretted by all members of his church, to whom he has endeared himself by his kindness and his efforts for the education and well-being of the poorer classes of his brethren.

MR. MACKENZIE, C. S.—We have seen a copy of a letter from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to Mr. C. S. Mackenzie, of the Civil Service, in which the Secretary writes as follows:—"I am directed to inform you that the reasons assigned in your demi-official note to my address of the same date, which has been submitted to the Lieut. Governor, are not considered by his Honour sufficient to account for, or excuse your deliberate disregard of the instructions you received. The terms in which those instructions were conveyed to you were intended, and could hardly have failed to make you understand that the early presence of an officer to fill the appointment to which you were nominated at Patna was desired by Government. If you were prevented by illness at the time you received the order, or even shortly afterwards, from joining the appointment so expeditiously as was evidently expected, it was your duty to have informed the Government, in order, that if necessary, some other arrangements might be made. If you were not too ill to travel when the order reached you, you should have immediately laid your dawk as directed, and had you done so you might have reached Patna by the time appointed. This is what a zealous officer would under the circumstances have made a point of doing. But even without taxing your zeal at all, you might very easily and comfortably have found your way to Patna. Instead of this you have been a month or six weeks loitering in Calcutta, without making, so far as the Lieutenant Governor is aware, a single attempt to carry out the order you have received, and in fact in open disobedience of that order. Such insubordination cannot be passed over unnoticed or unpunished, and the Civil Auditor has accordingly been directed to refuse audit of your salary for the time that may intervene between the 1st instant and the date on which you may report your arrival at Patna."—Englishman.

LAW REFORMS IN GWALIOR.—In the native state of Gwalior several reforms in the administration of justice have been introduced. According to the correspondent of a contemporary these reforms are—1st. Formerly there was a custom in the civil court to charge a fee of one anna in the rupee, but now the maharajah for the public benefit has reduced the charge to half an anna. This fee is payable on the decision of a case, whether in cash or by a draft on a bank. 2nd. The use of stamp paper has been abolished. 3rd. The plaintiffs are empowered to present their petitions in their own language, whether in Hindee, Persian, or Marahitee. 4th. On first presenting a petition it is not necessary to pay eight annas, but if it be presented a second time then payment is necessary.

NAVIGATION OF THE SUNDERBUNDS.—Steps have been at length taken by the Superintendent of Marine for the improvement of the navigation of the Sunderbunds. Channel Creek has lately been surveyed by Mr. Warden, and its channels are to be buoyed; so after the sacrifice of the flats Jellinghee and Beta, with some lacs of treasure, to the usual official supineness, we may now hope, with the exercise of common vigilance, to hear of no more accidents or losses in these creeks. Orders have also been issued for clearing away the trees which at present cumber the banks and obstruct the navigation in the smaller branches of the Sunderbund rivers, so that ere long, with the assistance of the Moolah railroad, we may see a fair field for capital opened in these hitherto neglected districts.

RAE JOTEE PERSAUD, as he is now officially styled, has not yet been put into possession of the villages bestowed on him as a reward by Government. Some of those confiscated having been restored to the proprietors, it has been necessary to select others, and till that has been done and approved by Government, the Lalla must wait in patience.

LADY CANNING arrived in Calcutta on Wednesday, the 19th January, between two and three o'clock in the afternoon. Two of the staff waited upon her ladyship at the railway terminus. The Governor General was expected on Monday, the 24th.

firing at the village from a respectable distance another. In the meantime this play at soldiers is setting a most evil example, which at one time was said to have had a very bad effect in the neighbouring native state of Joonaghur. It is not unlikely to cause much mischief in the Peninsula of Kattywar, where the people are naturally turbulent. It is quite time all this should be brought to a close, and if the Guicowar's army cannot do it, a detachment of our troops must be sent down to finish the matter. It is said that Bappoo Sahib, like some of our generals in the north, has not fully invested the place, but leaves one face of the little fort open so as to permit the Waghers to receive supplies, and take pleasure jaunts into the neighbourhood. It is supposed that they expect reinforcements from the side of Joonaghur; but, whether this be true or false, we repeat it is quite time the British Government should interfere, have Bombastes Furioso (Bappoo Sahib) removed from the command, and finish the whole thing by sending a British officer to command, assisted by a small detachment of British troops. Whoever may be thus deputed, will, we believe, find cordial support and assistance from Mr. Divine, the European gentleman who has the misfortune to be at present serving under a native commander. Not the least astounding feature in this affair is the profound silence which the Government have been able to preserve with regard to it hitherto. A subtle Machiavellian stroke of policy no doubt, if we only knew all.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 8.

THE "MINNESOTA."—The United States steam frigate Minnesota arrived at Bombay on the 17th Jan., from Colombo, having on board the Hon. W. B. Reed, U. S. Plenipotentiary to China, and Thomas Biddell, Esq., American Consul at Singapore. The Minnesota saluted the British flag on arrival by firing a royal salute, which was returned by H. M.'s receiving ship Achar, and from the saluting battery. The Plenipotentiary landed at 5 p.m., under a salute of thirteen guns from the saluting battery, and took up his residence at Parell. We extract the following description of this frigate from the Ceylon Times of the 12th:—"This fine frigate, one of the most recent additions to the United States navy, is now lying in our harbour, and we have no hesitation in saying she will repay the visitor for an inspection of her interior. As a fine specimen of naval architecture, the Minnesota is well worth a visit: whilst such fine ships as this are turned out of the American dockyards, English shipwrights may well have a care for their reputation. This steam-frigate is about 3,700 tons, carries a total complement of 600 hands, and mounts fifty guns of the most recent make, those bearing the name of the 'Dalgarnie Gun,' of great solidity at the breech, and carrying 10-inch hollow shot and shell a distance of eighteen hundred yards. The destructive power of this formidable means of warfare has not yet been put to the test by the Minnesota, but we can easily imagine how fearful must be its operation whether against ships or shore objects. Another of these monster guns is placed forward in the bows. The Minnesota, having flush decks fore and aft, offers a most commanding view, looking from stem to stern, presenting, as her main and upperdecks do, an unbroken sweep of beautifully clean white flooring, with everything about them in perfect condition. A temporary poop has been erected for the accommodation of the Minister, fitted in the most tasteful and finished style, and containing many rich productions of China and Japan. The captain's cabin on the main deck is a perfect picture of comfort and elegance, being roomy to a degree scarcely expected. Below this suite are the officers' saloon and berths, whilst forward from them extend the midshipmen's berths, and beyond these the accommodation for the forward officers. The magazine, the shell-room, the store-rooms, the armoury, all were in perfect order, and everything about them wore the same air of seamen-like neatness and discipline. We must not forget to mention the engine, an auxiliary screw of 400-horse power, and quite able to propel the huge vessel at the rate of nine knots, without the aid of wind. We were much struck with the compactness and beauty of the machinery, which appeared to contain almost every improvement of modern day. Altogether the Minnesota is well calculated to do credit to the people who call her theirs,—our brethren of the United States." The Hon. Mr. Reed, Captain Dupont, and the officers of the Minnesota, were entertained on Friday, the 21st, at dinner, by John Anderson, Esq., the American merchant, at his residence at the "Jamsed Bhag," Malabar Point, the band of the frigate being in attendance during the evening. The same company attended a nautch party the following evening, given by Messrs. Dossabhoj Merwanjee and Co., at Parell, at the mansion of Cursetjee Rustomjee, Esq. The Hon. Mr. Reed returned on board the Minnesota on Sunday afternoon, under a salute of thirteen guns from the saluting battery.

MINERALS.—The workmen on the Bhore Ghat railway have once more fallen in with some of those magnificent specimens of minerals which were so abundant two and a half years ago, but subsequently seemed to have disappeared. We are glad to observe that there is now no longer wanting an appreciation of their worth. The central museum is beautifully supplied, and there are many private collections abundantly provided, while quantities are on the way to England. We trust the Thull Ghat works will give us something new: those of the Bhore Ghat, though beautiful, do not contain in all above a dozen different minerals.—Standard.

A LONG VOYAGE.—The ship Streerajah Swaree has had the misfortune to perform the longest voyage between London and Kurrachee of any vessel chartered for this port last year. She left London with a cargo of railway stores, Government porter, and sundry merchandise on the 5th March last, and meeting with very stormy weather in the channel had twice to put into Southampton for repairs, which took three months to execute. She left that port again on the 2nd July, and when making for the Mauritius had to cut away her topmasts. Here she had to effect more repairs and replenish with water and stores. To crown the disasters of this unfortunate voyage, just as the vessel was heaving up anchor in the roadstead, previous to entering our harbour, the captain's son, a child of about four years of age, fell through one of the stern cabin windows into the sea. The father in a moment leaped after him, but by some mishap his foot got entangled with some ropes, and he was unable to render assistance to his drowning child. Few can imagine the suspense of the parent at this moment; but happily his horror was relieved when he witnessed the chief officer of the ship, followed by the tindal, leap into the sea, and extricate his darling from a watery grave. Under all these difficulties, the commander has borne up against them with the true magnanimity of a British sailor.—Kossid, Jan. 11.

THE NEW MERCANTILE COMPANY.—The Khoja Mahomedan merchants, who have formed a company for establishing a commission agency in England, with branch firms at Bombay and China, seem to have adopted very active measures for carrying out their project. At a meeting of the principal shareholders lately held, Setts Cassumbhoj Nathabhoj, Dhurumsey Poonjabhoj, Vally Mahomed Alvany, and Jeraz Fazul, were elected directors of the company. It has been resolved that out of the capital of ten lakhs (10,00,000) of rupees, three lakhs should be devoted to trading purposes, and seven lakhs to the commission agency business, and that the company stand for three years, this period to be further extended should the business prove a profitable one. Shareholders are not allowed to dispose of their shares without the permission of the directors. Little doubt seems to be entertained of the success of this undertaking, as the principal shareholders are wealthy, influential, and experienced merchants.

SHARP PRACTICE.—The detective force of Bombay are evidently endeavouring to vie with their brethren in Europe. A watch was stolen in Poona from a gentleman named Fitzjohn, which has been cleverly recovered. Without any clue as to who was the thief, or any mark to identify the stolen property, but simply from information that a native in possession of a watch was seen proceeding in the direction of Bombay, the police were soon on his track, and succeeded in capturing him in Bombay with the purloined watch in his possession. The offender was tried, convicted, and sentenced to three months' hard labour in the house of correction, one hundred and twenty miles from the spot where he committed the crime only two days previously, with every prospect of escape at the time.

BANK OF BOMBAY.—The Bombay Times mentions a rumour that the Bank of Bombay has lent sixty lakhs of rupees to the local Government. The bank has accordingly no money for general transactions, and advances cannot be obtained even upon Government paper. "The Bank of Bombay does not exist for the convenience of the Government, but for the convenience of the merchant." The bank does not exist primarily for either the one or the other, but for its shareholders. If the loan is a profitable one, and made on sufficient security, it is perfectly legitimate.

ROOFING FOR INDIA.—At the last meeting of the Bombay Mechanics' Society a discussion arose upon the best and cheapest roofing for India. An iron roof recommended, but not very strongly, by the President, was rejected by the meeting. A slate roof was then considered, and it was stated that a slate roof could be put up for two rupees the square yard. It should be laid over pine planking, with an overlap of two-thirds of the slate, and would then not need even examination for twenty years. So says Dr. Buist, and we fear our builders would be only too glad to believe him. On this side of India no pitched roof is of much use. The next norwester is sure to take it off. What we want is a flat roof, which shall weigh little, and cost about one-fifth of the present roof, a horizontal wall, the most expensive, the most dangerous, and the most inefficient roof ever yet devised by architects.—Friend of India.

"A SOLOMON COME TO JUDGMENT."—The Bombay Gazette quotes the following exquisite decision from the last-printed report of the Bombay Sudder:—"The disciple of a Gossain killed his Gooroo with a sword, under the impression that the said Gooroo had bewitched and caused the death of two of his brothers. The prisoner was sentenced to death, and the sentence confirmed. In this case the prisoner pleaded that he killed the deceased in self-defence, which the learned judge construed into a plea of 'guilty of wilful murder,' upon which point the Sudder mildly informed Mr. Warden 'that a plea of guilty of killing in self-defence is a plea of not guilty of murder, and should have been so recorded.' That is a very simple case. In Bengal a few weeks since a man was making mats. His wife asked him how many he had made. He replied 'you are a woman.' A few minutes afterwards his mother repeated the question. He made the same remark, took up a mallet, killed his mother and killed his wife. The judge sentenced him to three years' imprisonment because of the provocation!! The Sudder hanged the man, doing in this instance justice, but creating the unpleasant impression which follows so heavy an increase of the penalty by a court without original jurisdiction.

ADULTERATED FOOD.—The practice of adulterating food by the admixture of deleterious ingredients seems also to prevail in the markets on the island. On Saturday last, Jan. 8th, a dealer in arrowroot was charged with having in his possession a quantity of arrowroot, containing a very large proportion of chalk, as deposed to by Dr. Giraud, the chemical analyser. There being no evidence, however, to show that the deleterious substance in court was purchased from the prisoner's shop, with the exception of the prosecutor's statement, and Mr. Watson, the clerk of the markets, who was ordered by the magistrate to search the prisoner's shop, having found no other adulterated arrowroot, the magistrate, very properly, gave the prisoner the benefit of the #### Application for Brevet Promotion.

Adj. Gen.'s Office, Dec. 30.—Instances having occurred in which recommendations of officers for brevet promotion for service in the field have been forwarded from India by commanding officers of regiments direct to the Horse Guards, the C. in C. reminds officers in command of corps that such recommendations are entirely irregular,—contrary to the custom of the service,—and lead to delay in the disposal of the cases to which they refer.

Letters on this subject should invariably be addressed in the first instance to the military sec. to the C. in C. of the presidency in which the regiment may be serving.

Naval Brigade.

Military Dep., Allahabad, Jan. 7, 1859.—No. 653 of 1859.—His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General cannot allow the officers and men forming the Naval Brigade of H.M.'s ship Pearl to pass through Allahabad on their return to their ship, without expressing his acknowledgment of the excellent service which they have rendered to the State.

Disembarked on the 12th of September, 1857, they have for fifteen months formed a main part of the small force to which the security of the wide district of Goruckpore, and of the country adjoining it, has been entrusted, and which has held during that time important advanced posts, exposed to constant attack from the strongholds of the rebels.

The duty has been arduous and harassing; but it has been cheerfully and thoroughly performed, and the discipline of the Pearl's brig. has been admirable. The Gazettes of March 9 and 23, April 27, May 11, June 22, July 6 and 13, Aug. 13, Oct. 12 and 19, Nov. 23 and 26, 1858; and Jan. 11, 1859, have shown that when the Goruckpore field force has been engaged, the brig. has signally distinguished itself.

The Gov. gen. cordially thanks Capt. E. Sotheby, c.n., and his brave officers and men, for the valuable assistance which they have given to the army in Bengal, and he is glad to think that they do not quit the scene of their services without the satisfaction of seeing peace restored to the rich districts which they have protected.

Action at Morar Mow.

Camp at Simree, the 9th Nov. 1858.

SIR,—I have the honour to state for the information of the Maj. gen. comdg. Oude F. F., that I marched from Poorwah with the troops named in the margin,* at five o'clock on the morning of the 8th instant, leaving a small force behind for the protection of the town, under Maj. Bulwer, H.M.'s 23rd R.W.F.

Having been informed on the previous night that Oomero Sing was in occupation of the village of Morar Mow, with about 4,000 men and three guns, 1,400 of whom were estimated to be cavalry, I advanced with two H.A. guns and 400 cav., finding the approach to the village very difficult, and the surrounding country intersected with deep nullahs, and abounding in salt pits, especially about the vicinity of the village.

I ordered a troop of cav. to the right, and one to the left of Morar Mow, to turn his flank, and advanced with considerable difficulty with the remainder of the advanced force.

Hearing from Lieut. Chamberlain, of the Oude pol. force, who was on the right, that the enemy was in retreat on that flank, I despatched another squadron in that direction, and galloped forward with the remainder.

On reaching the other side of the village I sent the whole of the cav. in pursuit, under Capt. Jones, 1st Sikh cav., the senior officer, who pursued them for several miles, over almost impassable ground, and through thick crops and topes of trees.

The result was most satisfactory, two of the enemy's guns being captured, and about 100 men killed, chiefly Sepoys of the B.A., and a few of the 2nd cav.

The pol. cav., under Lieut. Chamberlain, and the 1st Sikh cav., under Lieut. Godby, behaved remarkably well.

Capt. Jones, who commanded the whole, brings to my notice Lieut. Stewart, of his corps, who particularly distinguished himself in a hand-to-hand encounter with some Sepoys; also Naib Rissalder Subhan Khan, who acted as his orderly, and showed himself a true and daring soldier, and has been at all times most zealous in the intelligence department, and saved the lives of many of his officers when his regt., the 9th L.C., mutinied at Sealkote; also Lance Duffadar Sham Sing, who distinguished himself in an encounter with some Sepoys.

Lieut. Chamberlain, comdg. the pol. cav., brings to my notice also Rissalder Ummer Sing, of the 5th cav., and Jemadar Purubdiah, of the 3rd, who was wounded when leading to his hand-to-hand fight, and showed a good example to his men.

I beg to thank Capt. Jones for the zeal and activity he displayed with his force, over most difficult ground.

Lieut. Chamberlain, comdg. the pol. cav., and those under his command, also merit my best thanks.

Capture of Forts near Mahonah.

The Rt. Hon. the Gov. Gen. is pleased to direct the publication of the following letter from the adjt. gen. of the army, forwarding a despatch from Lieut. Col. Galwey, c.b., 1st Mad. fus., comdg. field detach., reporting the capture of two small forts in the vicinity of Mahonah, in Oude, on the 23rd Nov., 1858.

While the conduct of the officers and men engaged in these operations has given the Gov. Gen. the highest satisfaction, his lordship regrets that it has been accompanied by the loss of Capt. C. Scott, Mad. engr., who had earned the approval of the Government by a zealous and efficient discharge of his duty.

R. J. H. BIRCH, Maj. Gen.,
 Secy. to the Govt. of India, Mily. Dept.,
 with the Gov. Gen.

From the Adjt. Gen. of the army to the Secy. to the Govt. of India, Mily. Dept., with the Gov. Gen.

SIR,—I have the honour, by direction of the C. in C., to forward, for the information of the Rt. Hon. the Gov. Gen., a letter original from Lieut. Col. M. Galwey, c.b., in 1st Mad. fus., comdg. field detach., dated 24th ult., with annexments, reporting the capture of two small forts in the vicinity of Mahonah; and I am to express Lord Clyde's regret that Capt. Scott, of the Mad. engr., who had already achieved a good reputation as an officer, should have fallen in these operations.

W. MAYHEW, Lieut. Col.,
 Adjt. Gen. of the Army.
 Adjt. Gen.'s office, Allahabad, Dec. 21, 1858.

To the major of brig. with Brigdr. Horsford, c.b. Camp Kooelee, Nov. 24, 1858.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for the information of Brigdr. Horsford, c.b., that, agreeably to instructions received, I marched from Mahonah with the troops as per margin,* at daybreak yesterday, and at about half-past eight o'clock arrived before the small fort of Rehora, situated on the right bank of the Goomtee, about nine miles from Mahonah.

I halted the troops, while Capt. Steel, the civil officer with the detach., sent H.M.'s Proclamation into the fort, with an intimation to the rebels, of whom there were about two hundred (fifty or sixty being sepoy of the regular army), that on their laying down their arms they would be spared. An answer was shortly received, to the effect that the fort and all the munitions of war it contained would be surrendered without opposition. Capt. Steel accordingly entered the fort, followed by the detach. of the Punjab rifles, but found that many of the rebels were escaping with their arms, some across the Goomtee, which runs close under the walls of the fort, and some towards Kooelee, a fort about two miles higher up the river. The Punjabees poured a fire into them, and followed the latter along the bank of the river in the direction of Kooelee, while I took the h.a. guns, supported by cav. and inf., round to intercept the fugitives; but owing to the numerous ravines intersecting the high bank, did not arrive in time to do more than throw a few shells into such bodies as were still within range on the opposite side.

I had decided on encamping here, with a view to demolishing as much of the fort as possible, when a report reached me from the officer comdg. the detach. Punjab rifles, who in the heat of pursuit had followed the rebels in the direction of Kooelee, that he had suddenly come under the fire of that fort, and requested support.

It being still early in the day, and Capt. Steel having arranged with the Karinda of the Chowdry of Lorbelah for the demolition of the fort of Behora, I considered it an object to have an additional day to dismantle that of Kooelee before rejoining the Brigdr.; as also more advisable to support the Punjabees than to withdraw them from such a distance.

I therefore resumed my march, and about half-past twelve o'clock arrived before Kooelee, which, according to the information I received, was held by from 100 to 200 rebels, of whom some fifty or sixty were said to be regular sepoy.

A similar offer of terms was made but rejected.

A village between the road by which we approached and the fort was then cleared by the fire of the two mortars and of two cos. of the Mad. fus., whom I placed on the bank of the river to watch the ghat, and also to prevent the rebels from doubling back. I then moved, with the mortars and the remainder of the fus., round the village to the west face of the fort, of which I obtained a view at the distance of about 350 yards.

While a fire was kept up by the mortars and the supporting co. of fus., the place was more closely reconnoitred by Capt. Scott, field engr., and myself, until we discovered the approach to the gate, and a position from which the artillery fire would be more effective.

To this latter the mortars and the two guns were brought, and the latter in a short time opened a practicable breach in the wall in front of the gate, but as this only served to disclose the fact of the approach being strongly flanked by defences, on which the artillery with me could have little effect, and as I did not consider the speedy possession of a place of this nature worth the sacrifice of life it must have entailed, I decided on suspending operations till I should receive further instructions from the Brigdr., and withdrew the troops to camp, which had been pitched about a mile from the fort, and from which picquets were thrown out to prevent the egress of the rebels on this side the river.

About midnight information reached me that the rebels had evacuated the fort, crossed the Goomtee, and fled to Kyarnowgong. The former intelligence I found this morning to be correct.

About forty of the rebels were killed in the pursuit from Rehora: their loss at Kooelee I have been unable to ascertain.

It grieves me deeply to have to report the loss on our part of Capt. Scott, field engr., who was shot while endeavouring more nearly to reconnoitre the gate. I need not dilate on his value, as it was well known to the Brigdr., but must express my sorrow at being unable to return him my thanks for his zealous and active services during the day.

I have nothing further to report than that the conduct of both officers and men was admirable, although they were under arms for a protracted period without being allowed that full play to their efforts which would have secured them instant success. The art. and the supporting cos. of fus. worked gallantly and steadily under a harassing fire.

Capt. Steel, Asst. Comsnr., afforded me every assistance in his power.

General Michel's Operations in Malwa.

Allahabad, 29th Nov., 1858.

The rt. hon. the Gov. gen. is pleased to direct the publication of the following letter from the Sec. to Govt. at Bombay, No. 209, dated 5th Novr., 1858, forwarding a report from Maj. gen. Michel, c.b., detailing further successful operations against the rebels in Malwa.

The Gov. gen. offers his thanks to Maj. gen. Michel, and to the officers and men engaged on this occasion.

To G. F. Edmonstone, Esq., Secy. to the Govt. of India, with the Gov. gen.

Allahabad, dated 5th Nov., 1858.

Secret Department.

Sir,—I am directed by the rt. hon. the Gov. in council to forward for submission to the rt. hon. the Gov. gen., copy of a letter from the Adj. gen. of the army, dated the 26th Oct. last, No. 4388, enclosing a copy of a despatch from Maj. gen. Michel, c.b., detailing further successful operations against the rebels in Malwa.

2. In forwarding this despatch, I am desired to request that you will draw the favourable attention of his Lordship to the gallant service rendered by Maj. gen. Michel, and by the force under his command, in the action near Mungrowlee.

3. I am also desired to state, it affords great pleasure to the rt. hon. the Gov. in council to recommend to the protection of the rt. hon. the Gov. gen., the officers mentioned in Maj. gen. Michel's despatch.

H. L. ANDERSON, Secy. to Govt.
Bombay Castle, 5th Nov., 1858.

Adj. Gen.'s Office.

Hd. Qrs., Poona, 20th Oct., 1858.

From the Adj. gen. of the army, to the Secy. to Govt., Bombay, Secret Department.

Sir,—I am directed by the C. in C. to transmit for the information of the rt. hon. the Gov. in council, the accompanying despatch from Maj. gen. Michel, c.b., detailing further successful operations against the rebels in Malwa.

The arrangements made by the maj. gen., and the conduct of his troops, European and native, appear to H.E. to deserve much commendation, as resulting in the defeat of the enemy, with a very trifling loss on our side; and Sir Henry Somerset much regrets that circumstances deprived the maj. gen. of the valuable services of the main body of his cav., who could have rendered the discomfiture of the enemy complete.

I am to convey the expression of H.E.'s hope that the favourable notice of Government will be accorded to the officers prominently brought to notice by the maj. gen.

EDWARD GREEN, Col., Adj. gen.

Hd. Qrs., M.D.A.

Camp Mungrowlee, 10th Oct., 1858.

From the Maj. gen., comdg. Malwa division.
To the Adj. gen. of the army.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you for the information of H.E. the C. in C., that from a report I received during the night of the 8th, whilst at Bhaderpore, I had reason to believe that the rebels had reached, late that night, a village two coss from Mungrowlee, en route from Chandairee. I consequently marched with force as detailed below, before daylight.

2. On reaching Mungrowlee, I was informed by scouts well in advance that the enemy was seen advancing about two miles from Mungrowlee, their number about 5,000.

3. We found the advance of the enemy, about 1,000 strong, close to the village of Barulpore—leaders, Tania Topee and Nawab Banda. A few rounds of shell drove this force back on the main body, who were strongly posted at the elevated village of Shajehan Mhow. The whole country round the village was covered with high scrubby jungle, in which infantry could not see the enemy until quite close to them; our force then advanced, each regt. affording a quota of skirmishers.

4. The guns were brought up, and the enemy, deserting the village, endeavoured to outflank our left, and from six guns played upon our troops advancing.

5. The jungle was so thick that a column of the enemy, without being perceived, got entirely in the rear of our support; when luckily, perceiving this, I ordered Sir W. Gordon, with a troop of the 17th Lancers, to disperse them.

6. He charged them, dispersed them, and cut up between one and two hundred.

7. I solicit to bring this officer's services prominently to the notice of H. E., and the squad, under his command, who did their duty admirably.

8. The enemy stood fairly to their guns, one or two of which were taken by a rush of the 92nd and 71st combined.

9. The 19th regt. N. I., under their very able and zealous commander, Capt. Barrow, emulated the conduct of the British troops.

10. At one period the enemy, in great numbers, were on all sides close to our front, flanks, and rear, and yet so dense was the jungle that their fire was utterly ineffective.

11. After their guns (six) were taken, they dispersed in every direction.

12. Unfortunately, all my cav., except eighty-five of 17th Lancers, were detached to Brigdr. Smith's Column, near Chandairee, or hardly a man would have escaped.

13. The heat of the day and the distance the men had already marched, together with the want of cav., prevented pursuit beyond the village. I have since learnt, that about 2,500 of the fugitives crossed the Betwah that night, at a ford about eight miles from Shahjehan Mhow, near the road to Chandairee, the water up to their chins.

14. In my telegram of yesterday's date, the amount of killed was rated by me at about 150. I have since reason to think that I then much understated the number; perhaps double the number would be nearer the truth.

15. As at Rajghur, so here our loss has been trifling, although in this fight the enemy stood their ground for about an hour well, and the principal portion of the killed was in the middle of our column to the rear.

16. My warmest thanks are due to Col. Lockhart, commanding the brigade.

17. He records his approbation of the conduct of Col. Hope, comdg. 71st regt.; Capt. Bethune, comdg. 92nd; Capt. Barrow, comdg. 19th regt.; 2nd Capt. Lemarchand, comdg. the B. A.; and to Sir W. Gordon, comdg. the 17th Lancers; as also of that of his brig. maj., Capt. Parker, 71st regt.; and of Ensign D. B. Hope Johnstone, who on this occasion, and at Rajghur, acted as his A. D. C.

18. My asst. adj. gen. and actg. qr. mr. gen., Capt. Champion of 24th regt. N.I., and St. John of the 92nd regt., together with my A. D. C., Maj. Elkington, H.M.'s 6th Royal Regt., did their duty zealously and well.

19. Since I left the Bhopal territory, Capt. Gordon, comdg. 17th regt. N.I., has been attached to me as political agent, and I cannot too highly speak of his exertions, both as regards his civil duties, and the assistance he gave me in the field.

Comdg. Malwa Div.

Operations against Maun Sing.

Allahabad, Jan. 11, 1859.

The rt. hon. the Gov. gen. is pleased to direct the publication of the following letter from the adj. gen. of the army, No. 1,747, dated the 30th ult., forwarding one from Maj. gen. Michel, c.b., comdg. Malwa div., submitting a report from Brigdr. Smith, comdg. 1st brig. Rajpootana f. f., detailing the successful result of a surprise of the rebel camp of Maun Sing, near the village of Koondrye in the Gwalior territory.

The Gov. gen. entirely concurs in the approbation expressed by H. E. the C. in C., of the arrangements by which this success was achieved, and of the conduct of the troops engaged on the occasion:—

From the Adj. gen. of the Army, to the Sec. to the Govt. of India.

Mil. dept., with the Gov. gen.

Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of the C. in C., to forward, for the information of the rt. hon. the Gov. gen. a letter in original, from Maj. gen. J. Michel, c.b., comdg. Malwa div., No. 641 of the 4th inst., giving cover to a report from Brigdr. M. W. Smith, of his surprise of the rebel camp of Maun Sing, near the village of Koondrye, in the Gwalior territory, and I am to express Lord Clyde's approval of the arrangements by which this success was achieved, and of the conduct of the troops employed.

W. MAYHEW, Lieut. col.,

Adj. gen. of the army.

Adj. gen.'s office, Allahabad, Dec. 30, 1858.

From Maj. gen. Michel, c.b. Comg. Malwa Div.

Allahabad, Camp Mhow, Dec. 4, 1858.

Sir,—I have the honor to forward for submission to his lordship the C. in C. in India a despatch from Brigdr. Smith, received yesterday, No. 104 of Nov. 20, detailing the successful result of a surprise on the rebel camp of Maun Sing near the village of Koondrye, in the Gwalior territory.

The surprise appears to have been very well managed; and I solicit his lordship's favourable notice of the affair, and that he will be pleased to pay such regard to the brigdr.'s recommendations as he may deem just.

J. MICHEL, Maj. gen., Comdg. Malwa Div.

Camp Mungrowlee, Nov. 20, 1858.

Sir,—I have the honor to state, for the information of the maj. gen. comdg. the Malwa div., that in accordance with instructions conveyed to me in letter No. 411, dated Bhelsa, November 1st, 1858, and in consequence of information received by me of the intended movements of the rebels upon Mungrowlee and the fort of Malharghur, I marched on the 10th to Godowlee, in order to cover and protect the above-mentioned places. I have since ascertained that the intention of the rebels to plunder those places, and take possession of the guns at Malharghur, was prevented by my advance.

2. On the night of the 12th I ascertained that the rebel force under Maun Sing, reported at three thousand men, composed of the late Gwalior Contingent troops, Bengal sepoys, and his own followers, recrossed the Betwa, and reached the small fort of Gurpairah.

3. I marched in that direction on the morning of the 13th; but, finding the neighbourhood of the fort deserted, I halted to breakfast at the village of Gopallee, on the river Molah.

4. I then, accompanied by my staff, reconnoitred the ground beyond the river, and found it covered with dense jungle, and intersected with deep nullahs, and did not perceive any traces of the enemy in that direction. About two P.M., having heard the rebel forces had moved off to Uttakairah, I marched in that direction.

5. I halted for the night and bivouacked at Burkairah, three miles from Uttakairah. As I did not allow any fires to be lighted, there was little opportunity of preparing food. I cannot speak too highly of the cheerful endurance of fatigue and hardship evinced during this day by both the European and native troops.

6. Hearing during the night that the enemy had left Uttakairah and proceeded to Koondrye, I marched for that village at 3.30 A.M. on the 14th.

7. I did not allow any trumpets or bugles to sound on the march, and coming to Koondrye just as day was breaking, we halted for a few minutes in rear of the village and some jowarrie fields, which served to conceal us from the view of the rebels, and formed the troops present in the field, as detailed below, as follows,—viz., 95th regt. in column of sections, a co. one hundred yards distant protecting their right flank. The 10th regt.

* Fighting men brought into action—Ben. art., 4 guns, 68; 17th Lancers, 90; 71st Regt., 210; 92nd Highlanders, 300; 19th Regt., 439—total, 991.

By. N.I., in quarter distance columns in echelon to the left rear of the 95th, leaving the road between the two regiments clear for the guns to advance, as the ground on either side was bad, and unsuited for their passage. The 1st lancers had orders to form in rear of the right flank of the 95th, and the 8th hussars in rear of left flank 10th N.I., when the inf. formed to the front. I placed Lieut. col. the hon. F. A. Thesiger, 95th regt., the senior inf. officer in command of the inf., and sent to order up the arty. by the road.*

8. We then moved forward our advance guard, consisting of one co. of the 95th regt. and two cos. 10th N.I., under Maj. Vials, 95th regt. in skirmishing order advanced on the right front through some jowarrie fields six feet high, and commenced firing, when within about one hundred yards of the enemy, Col. Raines detaching a company to assist, on coming in view of the rebel camp, and as the ground opened, the inf. deployed, the 10th N.I. being in short echelon with the 95th.

9. The art., under Col. Blake, galloped to the front by the road, formed line, and came into action on the left of the 95th, commencing with a few round shot, and then with shrapnel at five or six hundred yards fired into the largest masses which had collected after their sudden surprise; the shells bursting in the midst of the enemy must have caused numerous casualties. In the meantime the 1st lancers, under command of Lieut. col. Curtis, had conformed to the movements of the inf., by advancing in column of troops, and on approaching the enemy formed line to the right flank; the first lancers consisted of two very small troops, converted into squads, by forming single rank, the total number of men under regimental command being forty-two. The 8th hussars having only eighty-five sabres present, formed in front of the left of the line.

10. A rapid flight now commenced, and I gave the order for the cav. to pursue with one division of guns. In compliance with this order Col. Black, with the right division under Lieut. Lecocq, followed at a gallop, coming into action within case shot range, followed by shrapnel, the division continued in pursuit with the cav., coming into action whenever opportunity offered. The centre and left divisions of Col. Blake's troop proceeded with the inf. and followed at a slower pace, the horses of these divisions being much done up with the long marches when with the maj. gen.

11. Col. de Salis, having formed a third of the small body he had at his disposal in reserve, which remained within reach of the guns, pursued with the remainder in skirmishing order at a gallop, giving orders to his men not to fire, except at close quarters. In consequence of this order, and the effective pursuit of the hussars, led by Col. De Salis, notwithstanding the very unfavourable nature of the ground, which was covered with low jungle, a large number of the enemy in this part of the field were sabred and shot.

12. Col. Curtis led the 1st lancers in pursuit, at a gallop, of that portion of the enemy which fled in front of the right of the line, and disposed of all he could come up with, but a low and afterwards a thick jungle favoured the fugitives.

13. Col. Raines brought his men steadily and rapidly forward through some difficult ground, disposing of all he encountered on the right, but in consequence of the principal masses of the enemy taking a direction to the left, the hussars and 10th N.I. had greater opportunities, which they fully took advantage of.

14. Capt. Pelly with 10th N.I., by order of Lieut. col. the Hon. F. A. Thesiger, having moved towards the left, deployed and, forming in skirmishing order with supports, pursued, the men moving at the double, when the ground admitted of their doing so, and shot and bayoneted a large number of the enemy who had hidden from the hussars, and were taking shelter in the nullahs or amongst the jungles.

15. At my request, early in the action, Col. Curtis desired a Havildar maj. of his regt. (Shauk Abdoolah) who had seen Maun Sing at Powrie, to accompany a few of "Meade's horse," some nine men under Jemadar Beream Sing, for the purpose of capturing, if possible, the rebel leader. They used every exertion; but, in consequence of his rapid flight on horseback, could not succeed in this object. I beg to bring the conduct of the Jemadar and Havildar maj., and the men who were with him, to the favourable notice of the maj. gen. comdg.; they did most excellent service.

16. We pursued for about six or seven miles, when seeing what remained of the enemy were scattered over a large extent of front, of which we could only embrace a very small portion with our very small force of cav., and consequently only reached a few stragglers, I sounded the "re-call," and collected the force under some trees near the village of Rajpore till our baggage came up.

17. I have taken much pains to ascertain the loss of the enemy, and I feel convinced I am under the mark when I estimate it at over six hundred.

18. Lieut. col. the hon. F. A. Thesiger, H.M.'s 95th regt., in command of the inf., was most active and successful in carrying out my instructions.

19. I received every assistance, as I always do, from Col. De Salis, comdg. H.M.'s 8th hussars; Lieut. col. Blake, comdg. 3rd trp. h. a.; Lieut. col. Curtis, comdg. 1st B. lancers; Lieut. col. Raines, comdg. 95th regt.; and Capt. Pelly, comdg. 10th regt. B.N.I., and also from Cornet Goldsworthy, H.M.'s 8th hussars, my brig. major, who, as usual, performed his duties to my entire satisfaction.

20. Lieut. Hanbury, H.M.'s 8th hussars; Lieut. Mayne, 1st By. lancers; Lieut. Rawlins, H.M.'s 95th regt.; and Lieut. Pierce, 10th regt. N.I., acted as my orderly officers for the day, and gave me great assistance in carrying out my orders.

21. I trust the Maj. gen. will allow me to take this opportunity of acknowledging the ready and most valuable assistance which Col. Curtis, 1st By. lancers, and in his absence, Capt. Loch, of the same regiment, has on all occasions given me, placing his men at my disposal whenever required, for information and difficult services, in patrolling and gaining information of the movements of the enemy, these services involving great fatigue and much risk. I have also to acknowledge similar services rendered me by Capt. Pelly, 10th regt. B.N.I., valuable information having on several occasions been obtained by the native officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the 10th regt. N. I. I beg to enclose for the favourable consideration of the Maj. gen. a list of the native officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the above regiments, who have rendered themselves the most conspicuous.

22. But I attribute our success in this surprise to the indefatigable exertions and great zeal and intelligence of Capt. Bolton, asst. q. mr. gen., in gaining information of the movements and position of the enemy; he has been on all occasions most active and successful in this matter under most difficult circumstances, and with small means at his disposal, as well as in the discharge of other duties of his department.

23. I am happy to say the casualties were very trifling, as will appear by the return; this may to a certain extent be accounted for by the fact of the surprise being so sudden and complete that the enemy's matchlockmen had not time to light their matches, and, consequently, could only use their muskets or swords.

with the Gov. Gen.

To Maj. Cox, Maj. of Brig., Bridg. Colin Troup's F. F.,

Camp Mehndi, 20th Nov., 1858.

Sir,—I have the satisfaction of reporting, for the information of Brigadier Colin Troup, comdg. f. f., the successful operations of the light column entrusted to my command. For the more perfect understanding of the performances of this detach., I consider it necessary to faintly trace the progress of the column from Mittowlie. The Brigdr. broke ground at about 7 o'clock on the morning of the 17th, with his moveable column. Crossing about half a mile of open space, our course for three miles was through thick trees and underwood jungle, when the country was found tolerably open for a considerable distance; here and there narrow belts of jungle, and extensive groves of mangoes and other trees, with villages and cultivation scattered over a beautifully undulating expanse, to the small town of Secundrabad, distant from Mittowlie eleven miles, which we reached about half-past ten A.M. Here the force rested, and took refreshment, for an hour. From this to Jellalpoor the scenery is very similar to that south of Secundrabad; rich and picturesque. There is a gurra or fort at this place, of the general Oude character, surrounded by thick bamboo fences, and grown over with low jungle, which the Brigadier had carefully examined previous to the force passing by it and through the village, north of which for a mile or two high grass and patches of forest and cultivation are the principal features, up to the dense belt of jungle, through which we passed the last three miles of the road to the Ool Nuddee without any event worthy of record, a little before sunset. The distance travelled to this point is about twenty-five miles. Whilst fording the river, having evidence of the enemy being in force at Ally Gunge and neighbouring villages, distant three miles to the north, in accordance with orders I advanced at as rapid a pace as the cattle were equal to over heavy ground. The enemy opened fire upon my detach. (consisting of six guns of the 3rd trp., with brigade staff, one squad. of the 6th drag. gds. under Lieut. col. Custance, and the Mooltanee horse, under Maj. Cureton). When we were about 1,800 yds. from their position, four light guns discharged a few shot, which fell harmless about us. The night was closing in upon us; so, if only to secure the safety of our force during the night's bivouack, I determined to dash forward to 600 and 300 yds. from villages, &c., a telling range for round shot and shrapnell, which we poured into the flying foe until I perceived that the Mooltanee cav. I had sent on was sufficiently advanced to fall upon their rear. To our right flank I turned the fire of our guns, and by the admirable practice of Capt. Mercer and his officers the jungle in that direction was also cleared, and I waited the return of the Mooltanee horse. Maj. Cureton could not trace the rebels, owing to the jungle and dusk; so I moved towards the main force, and made my report to the Brigadier at about half-past seven P.M. Maj. Cureton was as energetic and able in the reconnaissance, which, but for the late hour, would have been turned into a pursuit, as were the h. a. in discomfiting and dislodging the rebel force, of whatever strength, from the country around the open space selected for our bivouack. In the morning the entire force marched to the encamping ground selected for a day's rest; but the commanding officer having satisfied himself that the rebel army, under command of their leaders, Prince Feroze Shah, Ismail Khan, Mosa Ally Khan, Waliyat Ali, the Peer Zadah, and other minor sirdars, who had been the previous day compelled to retire from Ally Gunge, had passed the night at or near to Chowkutta, a village five miles to the east, determined on sending a light column in pursuit.

At ten A.M. I received orders to move in command of the column, as per margin,* and in half an hour the force marched. We found Maj. Cureton's information perfectly correct. At and about the village of Chowkutta was abundant evidence of a large force having lately encamped there with guns, and many elephants, camels, &c. Up to the village of Mohsimabad I followed in the track of the united rebel forces; for, although they had tried very skilfully to mislead by diverging the wheel marks from the surface with bramble, &c., the attempts to mislead merely added to our labours, and during our half hour's halt at Bullareeah village, to refresh horse and man, we ascertained that Khan Ali and another sirdar had taken the direct road to Khuree, via Mahowagunge, with some of the guns and the principal number of elephants, camels, &c., whilst Feroze Shah and the other chiefs had made for Tendoor, having with them ten or eleven guns and about 3,000 troops of sorts. I at once decided upon pursuing this force, as the nature of the soil, grass, jungle, &c., prevented the possibility of our losing the many gun tracks, where, as along the line of ploughed country over which the Khuree force had passed, the gun tracks were obliterated by the prints of animals and men's feet.

We found arms and other munitions of war in the villages and huts in every direction, and secured many armed villagers, from whom I obtained valuable information, under threat of their being treated as rebels, with whom they had evidently been serving, though probably on compulsion. The same evidences of attempts to mislead were found throughout our progress, but at last, after a journey of twenty-five miles, wandering from south round by east, and north to west, we found the enemy retiring from the forests and villages to our front upon Mendee, when they drew up in as good a military position as they could select; a branch of the Chokha river secured their left flank from being turned, and high grass jungle in the rear to cover their retreat. At a distance of 1,600 yards they fired their first gun upon a detach. of 4th irr. cav., which I had sent round to ascertain whether the village of Burrageon was clear of inhabitants, ere I fired upon the rebel advance picket. Disposing of a few of the enemy, I moved the art. and whole line of cav. in admirable order to the front, disposing of the nat. cav. in extended order, so as to show an imposing front, whilst it offered as trifling a mark for the enemy's fire as possible.

The squad. of 6th drag. gds. was admirably kept in support of our guns by its gallant and most active commander, Capt. Bott, assisted by Lieut. Stoddart, throughout the fight; whilst Capt. Ellis equally distinguished himself, aided most ably by Lieut. Cox in disposing of his skirmishers as supports to the guns, whether in battery or echelon of half-troops. I put up with the enemy's fire in our rapid advance over the first 6,000 yds., keeping the sub-divisions of the troop at double intervals, and giving their art. men but little time to take aim. Though the fire from ten pieces of ordnance was very heavy, we did not lose a man. At this point a perfect shower of shot and shell was poured into the enemy's position from our six guns for about ten minutes; the rifles dismounted from the guns, advancing on our flanks in oblique line, so as to aid us with their fire. On perceiving that the enemy was breaking, I advanced the guns in echelon of half-batteries, so as to bring an oblique fire upon their art. and throwing forward the right of the half-troop. Capt. Mercer was enabled to enfilade the rebel battery, just moving in retreat, with a smashing fire from the three guns, obliging them to leave them in their position: the left half-troop and supports dashing up to the front, prevented the possibility of their being carried off. Before our second advance, the enemy commenced withdrawing two of their guns, but we compelled the rebels to drop one of these about half a mile in the direction we were pressing them, after firing its last shot. It is said that one gun drawn by horses escaped on the night overtaking us. Leaving a guard over the captured guns, I kept up the pursuit in the same order for several miles, through long grass jungle and over ground of a very broken character, attacking their various groups and giving the fugitives no rest so long as light favoured us. The execution done by our grape and rifle fire at close quarters must have been even greater than that which our round shot and shell effected at the longer ranges; another hour or two of daylight would have made our victory still more complete, and enabled us to come up to the fugitives as they were attempting to cross the rapid Chokha river, in which 'tis reported many men and cattle were drowned. For the security of the captured guns, now three miles in rear, our own safety, and in the hope of obtaining food for man and horse, I was necessitated to retire the entire force upon the village of Mehndi, where in open ground I placed our own and the rebel guns, and a large quantity of ammunition, in position, and with the 6th drag. gds. and rifles we shared a few biscuits, and the last dram per man; some straw was found, which answered for our bed and only covering from the heaviest dew I can call to mind. Our horses remained saddled and in traces, with girths and bits loosened by their only attendants, their gallant Eur. riders. The 4th irr. cav. and Mooltanee horse bivouacked in a tope and village on our flanks, and the only cause of regret was our being compelled to leave the battle field to the few of the enemy, who were observed during the night, in their invariable occupation after battles, burying and burning their dead, and removing what they could.

It was not possible to prevent this; my troops had between ten and a half A.M. and dusk made a detour of thirty-five miles, the last eight or ten of which, during a two hours' fighting, pursuit and retirement in like order, firing to the rear; we could not leave nor move our prize, the enemy's art., and no preventive measures could have been taken over miles of high grass jungle, interspersed with deep pits and pools of water. I am at a loss for words to express my admiration of the unsurpassed performances of the light column I had the privilege of commanding. Taking advantage of all favourable ground, we must have trotted eight or nine miles of the first twenty-five, and during the five miles pursuit from first sight of the enemy the trot and gallop were our only paces; strength and energy were most fully tested, and through God's blessing not found wanting; sixty-five miles over a most difficult and unknown country has been accomplished by this portion of Brigdr. Troup's f. f., between seven A.M. of the 17th and dusk the following evening, under circumstances but faintly described.

All our movements and firings were executed with admirable regularity, difficulties were encountered but to be overcome with an enthusiasm and spirit by the European portion of the force, peculiarly British. The Mooltanee horse, commanded by Cap. Dixon, was most admirably directed by as active and gallant a young officer as I would wish to serve with. Unhappily I had but a sufficient number to perform the important duty of feeling the country to our front and flank. The 4th irr. cav. advanced, as desired, with great regularity, and showed a very imposing front; it is splendidly horsed. It appeared to the European portion of the force that a most favourable opportunity for this young regt. to distinguish itself in the fight was neglected; but Capt. Hall has described the obstacles, and shown that the orders sent, owing to the difficulties of the jungle, &c., did not reach him. Lieut. Cadell, who had a detach. of this regt. on the left of the guns, was most anxious to carry out my orders, and proved himself a zealous and intelligent officer. At our most advanced position, whilst Capt. Mercer with the right half troop and rifle supports was showering his grape into cover at 250 yards to his front, where a large number of the rebel rifle and matchlockmen were secreted, two mounted leaders stole through the grass to their right. I perceived them galloping towards the left half troop, which was firing round shot and shrapnell upon the more distant foe. Doubtful as all were whether the horsemen belonged to us or the enemy, I galloped towards Lieut. Cadell's detach., called out to him and the art. to look out, for as I now observed the fanatics, who came right through the guns, and were at length shot down by our revolvers or the 4th cav. carbines firing at the same time. The slain were very handsome men, one a russaldar of the 14th irr. cav. and the other wore the 12th cav. pouch, a native officer of some grade. I distinctly saw the matchlockmen and other soldiers at the Ghat and the cover falling under the discharges of grape from the right half troop and riflemen (here Capt. Mercer was ably aided by Lieut. Hume), as I did the more distant horsemen from the shot and shell most skilfully thrown by Lieuts. Taylor and Water. The admirable practice and its effects throughout the engagement was perceived by all, owing to our open order, and consequent freedom from smoke, but to none more perfectly than myself, and two incomparable orderly officers, Capt. Bishop, my able staff, and Lieut. Moncrief, Ben. E., who offered his services. To this most promising young officer I am especially indebted for the great intelligence and pluck he evinced in carrying my orders in an unmistakable manner to the various branches of my command; Lieut. Moncrief's correctness of eye and judgment for field movements enabled him, on his untiring horse, to carry out my orders with marvellous rapidity, and I can only hope that Brigdr. Troup will appreciate Lieut. Moncrief's voluntary aid as I do. All the European officers and soldiers in the field upheld the honour of their country to my satisfaction, for I desire to praise all with reference to the material at their disposal and opportunities offered. New levies cannot be expected to evince the zeal of tried veterans, nor can the Hindoostani soldier, under the influence of fanaticism and superstitious awe of their teachers, be expected to act against their brethren (except when quite guarded against such influence) as with the Mooltanee, Siekh, and Afghan, against our common enemy. And I feel confident that Brigdr. Troup, in forwarding this report to the C. in C., will do me the justice of assuring his lordship that whilst I write and speak strongly, but faithfully, I act towards all in accordance with my estimate of their zeal and faithfulness in the discharge of duty, rather than by the amount of work they may have the ability and opportunity of performing. The following day we were engaged, as soon as the fog cleared off, in scouring the battle field, and collecting information. About fifty dead bodies, principally killed by grape, were counted, one group of twenty having been dragged together, but the evidence of wounded soldiers, some prisoners, and the inhabitants far and wide, goes to prove that the rebel army suffered great loss of men and cattle from our fire, and in attempting to cross the treacherous and rapid Chokha. Their discomfiture, all engaged can certify, was most complete, and after (reliable) evidence proves that the proud rebel army of 4 P.M. of the 18th Nov. was before nightfall scattered in all directions before us, and their chiefs powerless fugitives. Capt. Dixon, with his Mooltanee, tracked them the following day many miles in various directions, and brought in reliable information to the above effect. Capt. Clarke's, asst. coms'r., inquiries and observations were most valuable, and generally in support of Capt. Dixon's information; I am much indebted to Capt. Clarke for the spirit and discriminating ability he aided me with throughout the 18th and 19th. Ens. Bird, doing duty with the 3rd tr. 3rd brig. h. a., provost marshal of the force, accompanied my column, and was most useful in the intelligence depart. In conclusion, I beg to bring to favourable notice the gallant European soldiers, who, directed and aided as I have tried to describe, under God's guidance and blessing, gained for Brigdr. Troup's f. f. (any detach. from which, under corresponding circumstances, would have executed his order in like spirit) this glorious victory. The energy, pluck, and unanimity evinced by all our countrymen engaged could not be surpassed, and must ever be remembered by me with feelings of deep gratitude and pride. I have now the happiness of thus publicly thanking Capt. Hall and his officers united with us in desire to perform their duty in a necessarily difficult command. Capt. Bott and his officers, who, with his eighty sabres of the distinguished 6th drag. gds., freed us from all anxiety as to cav. support to the guns, is as gallant as he is energetic. Lieut. Dixon, comdg. detach. Mool-tanee horse, notwithstanding the serious injury lately received and only partially recovered from, claims my highest praise for thus representing this gallant commander, Maj. Cureton; of Capt. Ellis and his most active subaltern, Lieut. Cox, who, when the two half troops worked independently or in echelon, shared the command with him, I need but remark that they do honour to that honoured corps (which has been so long and gloriously united in works and spirit with the Ben. art.), H.M.'s 60th rifles. 2nd Capt. C. McW. Mercer, who comd. the tr. (owing to Lieut. col. Remington's illness), with his three most zealous subalterns, performed their work to the admiration of all, without an accident or hesitation throughout the day, notwithstanding the pace we kept up over rough and jungle country, interspersed by difficulties so greatly hidden from view, required great skill in directing and driving; and when it is borne in mind that the thirty-six riflemen had to keep their seats on the ammunition boxes, our freedom from accident entitles Capt. Mercer and his noble tr. to the highest praise. To the med. officers, Drs. Davenport, Jones, and Oliver, I am much indebted for the zealous performance of their duties whilst exposed, as other officers, to the dangers of the battle. Dr. Oliver took charge of the art. hospital (on my soliciting Dr. Bowhill to remain with the hd. qrs. of the f.f. in his important charge), and gave me much satisfaction. Of my staff, Capt. Bishop, I have so frequently had occasion to write and speak in the highest terms of praise, that I will merely remark that, on this occasion too, he aided me with his usual spirit and ability, meriting my gratitude.

Attack on Ferozeshah by the Etawah Levy.

Allahabad, 22nd Dec., 1858.

The Gov. Gen. has much pleasure in directing the publication of the subjoined account of a very gallant and successful attack made by the officers and men of the Etawah levy, upon a force of rebel soldiery largely superior in numbers and well equipped. It was a daring exploit, and the Gov. Gen. desires to express his warm commendation of the courage, skill, and determination which marked it. His Lordship's thanks are due to Lieut. Forbes, comdg. the levy; to Mr. Hume, the magistrate of Etawah; to Mr. Maconochie; and Serg. Maj. Edmonds. The death of Mr. Doyle, who sold his life dearly at the head of cav. under his command, is a great loss to the public service. It will be a satisfaction to the Gov. Gen. to mark, by the grant of a pension to Mr. Doyle's widow, his sense of the zeal and courage with which that officer's duties have at all times been performed.

The Gov. Gen. desires to acknowledge the gallantry and good example of Ressaldar Mahomed Assudoolah Khan, also an officer of the po. cav. His Lordship confers upon this brave man the first class of the "Order of British India," with the title of "Sirdar Bahadoor":—

From Lieut. Forbes, comdg. Etawah Yeom. Levies.

To W. Muir, Esq., Secy. to Govt., N.W.P., Allahabad.

Camp Sahson, 12th Dec., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of H. E. the Rt. Hon. the Gov. Gen., that an engagement took place between the Etawah levies, with a troop of po. cav., and a large body of rebels under Ferozeshah and other leaders.

On the afternoon of the 6th inst., while in camp at Deenapore, intelligence reached Mr. Hume, the magistrate, that a body of rebels, said to be under the Nana, had crossed the Ganges; it was determined at once to march to Pappoond. The distance, twenty-four miles, was accomplished during the night.

During the 7th, the rebels having arrived in the Etawah district, ravaging the villages, some information was obtained as to their numbers, and, as late at night, it was ascertained that they had surrounded the fort of Sehar, where the Tehseeldar of Biddoonah resides, and parties were threatening Hurchundpoore, the fort of a very loyal zemindar hard by, it was determined by Mr. Hume and myself to move out early next morning to the latter place and attack the enemy at once, it being extremely probable that, with their superior numbers, they would choose their own opportunity and attack us at a disadvantage.

Some reinforcements reached camp during the night, and, on the morning of the 8th, the force, as detailed below,* left Pappoond, and just about eight o'clock A.M. came across an outlying picket of the enemy. Their cattle, elephants, &c., were grazing in the fields about two miles and a half from their main body. It was afterwards ascertained that they were surprised, no intimation of our movements having reached them. A couple of round shot drove in the picket, and another mile brought us in sight of the main body under Ferozeshah, numbering 1,400 cav. and between 100 and 200 inf.; the latter, men of the 28th nat. inf., who joined Ferozeshah after the evacuation of fort Royah. The remainder of the cav., 600 strong, moved off with followers, elephants, camels, &c., to the west, some distance from the scene of action.

Our inf. and guns advanced in line, the left being covered by the Etawah cav., the right by a comp. of inf., in skirmishing order, and the 13th troop po. cav.

When within 600 yards of the enemy, the guns were brought into action to the front, and the rebels, shifting a large body of cav. to our right, the skirmishers were recalled, and the Etawah cav. and the 13th troop rapidly exchanged positions. The Etawah cav. were advanced against the enemy under cover of the guns, which, under the able direction of Mr. Hume, who acted as second in command during the day, played on them to the last moment.

The cav., under their gallant leader Mr. Doyle, charged a large division of the rebels. A desperate struggle took place, Mr. Doyle distinguishing himself by the same skilful swordsmanship and daring bravery which gained himself so conspicuous a name in all the affairs of the Agra militia during 1857; when, his horse being severely wounded, he was dismounted and cut to pieces. On this, about fifty of the men, pressed on all sides by superior numbers, gave way, and, pursued by the rebel cav., swept down on our right flank. A like number got completely separated from our force, and, being prevented from rejoining by the crowd of the enemy's horsemen, made their way into Etawah; the remainder, for nearly ten minutes, made a desperate stand over the body of their leader, and at last retired in good order.

The loss of so distinguished an officer rendered our subsequent success most dearly bought.

Meanwhile, a party of the enemy came down on our left flank, but were stopped by two successive charges of the 13th troop po. cav., under the able leadership of Ressaldar Mahomed Assudoolah Khan, himself desperately wounded. This brave man, a model of a native soldier, is worthy of reward, and I have the honour to request you will be good enough to move his Lordship, in order that some recognition of his distinguished services may be made; other men of this troop also signalled themselves in hand-to-hand encounters.

The partial success of the rebels on our right emboldened them. A third detach., leaving men to engage the 13th troop, swept round to our left rear and attacked the inf. ammunition guard; they were repulsed with loss on both sides. A fourth party, avoiding the charge of the Etawah cav., passed by our right flank to the rear, and succeeded in driving off three camels; these were speedily recaptured by a comp. of inf., who, extending in skirmishing order, advanced rapidly over the plain, retook the camels, and closing up again, moved back to the guns, threatened in front and flank by the rebel cav., who seemed ubiquitous.

During their absence Mr. Hume was left in command of the guns, and few remaining inf. He was charged, front, left flank, and rear, by the rebels, in great force. Three times they forced their way boldly down on the guns, which, supported by the inf., were brought into action in the above directions; each time they were driven off with loss. This was the critical period of the fight.

The inf. and art., reserving their fire, behaved to the admiration of all. Mr. Maconochie directed two of the guns, and Serj.-Maj. Edmonds, conspicuous for his address, contributed mainly to the repulse of the last charge, by swinging round the 12-pdr. gun he was serving, and taking the enemy in their flank with a volley of grape. Such clouds of dust and smoke were raised, that, except the flashing of the sabres and the noise of the horses, little could be perceived of the movements of the enemy until they were almost into the square of guns and inf.

After these repulses they seemed to have had enough of the fight, and sheered off in all directions. The affair lasted three hours.

We gathered up our dead and wounded, and intelligence (which proved false) having been received of the advance of a large body of inf., it was deemed prudent to move on to our destination, Hurchundpoore.

The enemy on the field numbered 1,400 cav., and between 100 and 200 inf. The only large individual bodies of men were of the 1st and 2nd reg., and 11th, 12th, and 15th irreg. cav.; the remainder were made up of men of every mutinied cav. regt. in the service, with 150 Sikhs and Affghans, all well armed, the cav. well mounted.

Their loss was fifty-eight killed, and about twenty-five severely wounded, who were subsequently carried off in the doolies they had with their force: many more were wounded, and went off on their horses. Moorad Ally Khan, an ex-Nazim of the Nawab of Furruckabad, and one of their leading ressal-dars, were killed; Goolam Ghah Peerjee (a disciple of the Moulvie killed at Po-wayn) severely wounded. These and other particulars were verified by the statements of one of the rebel sowsers subsequently taken prisoner.

Our loss was heavy.

Some carbines, muskets, and a large number of horses remained in our possession. The rebels, encouraged by our small numbers, fought with great energy and determination. They probably comprise the best body of cav. in the field against us. Full particulars of the week's operations have been detailed in a report submitted by Mr. Hume. I have the honour to be, &c.

THE TRUE CEMENT.—"A learned native of Hindustan remarked to me, 'We have our proverb as well as you about honesty and policy, which we say are twins that are born, live, and die together. But, unfortunately for us, whenever the temptation to err happens to be pretty strong, the unsubstantial nature of our motives becomes apparent, and straightway the whole of our moral structure falls to pieces, from the want of the cementing principle of good faith by which your conduct is regulated. The enormous superiority of physical force on our side sinks absolutely into nothing when opposed to this moral strength which you bring into the field, and may continue to exert as long as you please.'—Capt. Basil Hall's Fragments.

THE PUNJABEE LEVIES.

A FRENCH proverb, quoted till it has become threadbare, tells us that too great eagerness to exculpate oneself is equivalent to self-accusation. This cynical remark applies in some degree to the Punjab authorities, who, beginning at length to take fright at the number of Punjabees they have brought into the field, have put forth two pleas in their defence worthy of the Chancellor's Court—firstly, they did not do it; secondly, they were obliged to do it. The necessity of raising a force of armed men to co-operate with the overweighted handful of Europeans is wholly undeniable. To the vigour and promptitude displayed by the Punjab Government at the most critical period of the revolt, the preservation of our Indian empire is largely due. No man in his senses would ever venture to utter a word in disparagement of the signal services rendered to the commonwealth by Sir John Lawrence and the European officers under his control. To them the country is mainly indebted for the maintenance of tranquillity in the Punjab, and for the capture of Delhi. For such services as these we would offer no stinted measure of praise, but not the less does a feeling of disquiet arise when reflecting on the new danger that threatens the future peace of the empire. At this moment, according to a circular issued by the Lahore Government, there are 72,500 Punjabees under arms and drawing pay. Of these, 48,500 have been raised to meet the exigency of the times. It is true that in the Punjab itself there are not so many native troops as previous to the mutinies; but, on the other hand, the present force is much more formidable than the former one. Though numerically weaker, it is stronger for all warlike purposes. In May, 1857, there were 24,000 Punjabees and 41,000 Hindostanees within the province, whereas now there are not more than 46,000 native soldiers; but then these 46,000 men represent a brave and martial race, skilled in the use of arms, and eager for the fray. We are told, indeed, that this number is to be gradually reduced; that recruiting has been suspended, and that the battalions serving in the field are to be allowed to diminish to 700 each. So far as this assurance goes, it is no doubt very satisfactory, and would be still more so, were it not for the insane resolution taken by Lord Canning to organise a Sikh artillery. The proposition is so utterly mad and suicidal, that it would be incredible, were it possible to doubt the fact. Unfortunately, the Notification appears in General Orders from Allahabad, so that there remains not the slightest ground for imputing the charge to the inventive and hostile genius of the Indian Press.

* The following G.O. issued to the force in the field, having received the sanction of the right hon. the Governor General, is published to the army:—

"Dated 1st Dec., 1858.
"Directing the undermentioned pieces of ordnance to be attached to the 1st compy. of Sikh artillery:—
"One 18-pounder gun, one 8-inch howitzer, with 300 rounds of ammunition per piece.
"Two 8-inch mortars, with 80 rounds per mortar.
"Two 5½-inch mortars, with 160 rounds per mortar.
"And authorising the entertainment of the regulated detail of artificers for a field battery of six guns."

After this it is quite superfluous for the Punjab authorities to plead necessity, or any other excuse. It was reserved for the Governor General to perfect at leisure the perilous instrument they were the first, under extenuating circumstances, to conceive and partly construct.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUNJAB, 1856-57, 1857-58.

We are indebted to two of our Indian contemporaries for the following gleanings from the Punjab Report for the last two official years. It is satisfactory to observe that there has been no decrease in civil litigation. "Satisfactory," because the circumstance clearly indicates that the belief of the people in the stability of the British Government was never seriously affected. The suits for the two years are thus classified, but suits relating to landed property are for the most part excluded, as falling under the Revenue Department:—

Inheritance ... ..	872	1,974
Mortgage ... ..	834	1,161
Marriage, &c. ... ..	1,808	1,150
Debts ... ..	81,687	62,409
Miscellaneous ... ..	16,555	14,418
Total ... ..	51,751	81,112

In criminal cases, on the other hand, there was a positive diminution in 1857-58 as compared with the preceding year, though we cannot adopt the Report's suggestion, "that people were in a subdued ferment, and amidst so much anxiety, hope, and fear, there was no leisure for common crime." Such a reason as this is contrary to the universal experience of mankind. It is far more consistent with human nature to suppose that the native officials were less active than in ordinary times in bringing offenders to justice, and also that parties aggrieved may have preferred to take justice into their own hands, trusting to the "subdued ferment" aforesaid for their escape from any very vigilant surveillance of the police. Be that as it may, the criminal cases disposed of during the period under notice are reported as follows:—

	June.	July.	August.	September.
1857	2,470	2,327	1,868	1,851

In addition to these, however, a goodly number of persons were subjected to various degrees of punishment for offences connected with the mutinies, as appears from the annexed statement:—

	By Military Tribunals.	By Civil Authorities.	Total.
Hanged ... ..	86	300	386
Shot ... ..	628	1,370	1,998
Imprisoned ... ..	245	1,226	1,471

Fined ... ..	—	272	272
Total ... ..	959	4,669	5,628

The conduct of the civil police in the Punjab throughout the disturbances is described as most excellent and praiseworthy. Besides discharging their usual duties, they were indefatigable in their pursuit of mutineers, and oftentimes assumed a military attitude in guarding ferries and other important posts. With the exception of the treasuries at Kussowlie and Sealkote no public money was plundered within the limits of the Punjab.

The Native Press soon became troublesome, and required to be closely watched. Nor is this surprising, seeing that, with one exception, the editors were Hindostanees. The district officers were therefore instructed to exercise a strict censorship, and at Peshawar an editor was imprisoned; a press was also stopped at Sealkote, and another at Mooltan. The post-office was converted into a still more dangerous instrument for the diffusion of disaffection. On this subject the Report furnishes some interesting particulars:—

"The danger of sedition being diffused through the medium of the Post-office was obvious, and all letters addressed to sepoys were opened at the principal stations. Thousands of other vernacular letters were also inspected, and at many stations the magistrate became the postmaster. The correspondence showed but too well how necessary this precaution was. The number of seditious letters thus discovered was alarmingly great. The treason was generally couched in figurative and enigmatical phrases. A strange interest attached to those revelations, as showing what the natives really said of us among themselves at that juncture. It was abundantly manifest that the sepoys and others really did believe that we intended to destroy their caste by various devices, of which the impure cartridge was one; that the embers of Mahomedan fanaticism had again begun to glow, and that we were observed to be but a mere handful of whites amidst a vast population of Asiatics. These things, often before imagined in regard to natives, were now veritably seen under their own hand in letters never intended for European eye."

The condition of the revenue is highly satisfactory, though a slight decrease is observable. It is singular that at a time of such intense and universal excitement there should have been any loss in the excise upon spirituous liquors, drugs, and opium, and it certainly would not have happened in this country. But the decrease in the consumption of spirits is attributable to the dispersion of camp-followers and sutlers hanging about cantonments, rather than to any improvement in the moral habits of the population. The stamp duties also declined, notwithstanding the increase in litigation:—

It could not reasonably be expected that during such a terrible crisis any extension could be made to the educational system already in play. It redounds in no slight degree to the credit of the local authorities that the good cause has sustained no material check. Their conduct, indeed, was characterised by the practical good sense which appears to have become indigenous in the Punjab. Instead of wasting their time and energy upon the achievement of impossibilities, they most judiciously restricted their efforts to the maintenance of the position previously acquired. The result is that 50,000 boys, or "one in twenty-three of the school-going population," are at present under instruction.

Of the Public Works we cannot speak quite so favourably, though even in that department there are grounds for congratulation rather than for complaint.

"That section (of the Grand Trunk Road)—says the Report—which runs through the Cis-Sutlej States is now nearly complete, except the bridging of the several difficult streams near Umballa. There is no chance, so far as can be seen at present, of these being spanned by permanent bridges, for which an immense sum will be needed. If they are bridged at all, it must be by temporary wooden structures. Besides these unbridged streams, there are not five miles of unmade road in the section. During the past two years some thirty-three bridges of sizes, temporary or permanent, have been added. Some few miles of new road have been completed, both as regards earthwork and metal; and the new metal has been laid down on the parts previously metalled. It was along this road that the troops, stores, and siege-trains proceeded to the siege of Delhi. It may be truly affirmed that, at that rainy season of the year, if there had not been this good road—if the line had been in the same condition as it was five years ago—the vast amount of material and munitions of war could not have reached the scene of action; and that without this road it might hardly have been possible to take Delhi, at least during autumn of 1857! From this case we may learn the paramount necessity of improving our means of military communication."

Much, however, still remains to be done. During the last two years the expenditure on roads has exceeded £110,000, but "thousands of expensive bridges and many hundred miles of metalled roadway have yet to be constructed." But let it not be imagined that the construction of military roads was the only department of public works that engaged the attention of the local government. Upwards of £260,000 have been laid out upon the Baree Doab Canal, one of the greatest engineering enterprises ever attempted for the benefit of a conquered people, and a considerable sum was expended on the Mooltan and Trans-Indus Inundation Canal. The total expenditure on public works is exhibited below:—

	1856-57.	1857-58.	Previous Expenditure.	Total.

It would be unpardonable, however, were we to pass over unnoticed the inestimable services rendered by the Electric Telegraph during the crisis of 1857.

"It may be truly said that for months the military and political correspondence of the Punjab Government was carried on by telegraphs. The orders on matter vitally affecting the public safety were communicated by these means. Through the same medium measures were concerted with the Commander of the Forces before Delhi. Frequently a hundred messages would be received and issued in the Chief Commissioner's office during a single day. It were superfluous to mention the immense advantages which the telegraph gave us over our enemies. Suffice it to note the instance at Lahore, when the authorities were warned by the telegraph of the Delhi disaster, disarmed the sepoys before they could obtain information by post. If there had not been a telegraph, an outbreak at Lahore might possibly not have been averted at that moment. Except in the Cis-Sutlej States, and once at Philor on the Sutlej, there has been no instance of the telegraph wires being cut, even during the crisis."

We now arrive at the all-important question of Finance, which is thus treated in the Report:—

The large cash balance in hand, it may be remarked, was partly due to the Delhi Prize Money, which has been temporarily lodged in the public treasury—from which it cannot too soon be withdrawn in order to be applied to its proper purpose. Under the head of "military expenditure," the cost of the regular army and of cantonments is not included, and, as we think, with reason. The tranquillity of the province is chiefly maintained by the provincial battalions, while the real object of keeping so large a regular force along the frontier is rather imperial than local. It is surely an error to charge the military expenses of each presidency as a separate and local item, whereas they are intended for the general advantage of our Indian empire. The present system leads to most narrow and erroneous estimates of the value of a particular province or presidency. It would be just as wise to inveigh against the county of Radnor or of Sunderland. The empire must be regarded in its unity and integrity, like the human body, and no one member should be exalted or depreciated by comparison with another.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FEB. 22.

EUROPEAN SETTLERS IN INDIA.

Mr. KINNAIRD asked the Secretary of State for India whether orders had been sent out to the Government of India for the introduction of a Bill making it penal for any European to enter or reside in any of the new territories, Nagpore, Oude, Pegu, and others, without a licence, or to remain after the licence is withdrawn?

Lord STANLEY said that no order to the effect stated had been sent out to the Government of India, nor was it the intention to instruct the Government of India to introduce a Bill making it penal to enter without a licence into any of the new territories alluded to. But in order that he might act fairly towards the hon. gentleman, he should explain the circumstances out of which his question arose. By the Act of 1833 it was declared illegal for any European to enter into or to reside in, without a licence, any of the territories acquired by the East India Company since the 1st of January, 1800. It was left to the Governor General of India to frame laws to enforce that Act, and to compel the performance of the preliminary enactment. A penalty intended to enforce obedience to that enactment was inserted into that branch of the code so long before the council. He understood that the Government of India had exercised a power of preventing the entrance into or the residence in the lately acquired states without the proper sanction. That power had been exercised in Nagpore against Major Ousely, who subsequently brought an action in the Supreme Court of Calcutta, which resulted in a verdict, with damages against the Government. The state of India presented this anomaly: there was an Act of Parliament by which the legislature of this country declared expressly that the presence of Europeans in certain of the territories of India was an offence against the law, but no instructions had been sent out by the home government to carry it into force. Instructions had been recently forwarded to the Government of India that no decisive steps should be taken upon this point until the authorities in India had communicated with the government of India at home. But whatever step might be taken with regard to preventing Europeans entering the native states, it certainly never was intended to enforce that part of the Act of 1833 which limited the right of Europeans to reside there.

THE CONSULAR ESTABLISHMENT AT JAPAN.

Mr. WISE asked the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs what was the proposed consular establishment in Japan, and what would be the salaries of the consul general or consul, of the vice consuls, and of the other officials connected with the consulates of Jeddo, Simoda, &c.?

Mr. S. FITZGERALD replied that the proposed consular establishment in Japan would be constituted as follows, viz.:—In Jeddo, there would be a consul general, with a salary of £1,800 a year; a consul, £750; an interpreter, £500; an assistant interpreter, £405; two student interpreters, £200 each. In Nagasaki, a consul with £800 a year; an interpreter, £500; an assistant interpreter, £324. In Hakodadi, the consular arrangements and salaries were the same as Nagasaki.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FEB. 24.

CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA.

Mr. S. WARREN explained his reasons for not moving the Resolutions of which he gave notice soon after the opening of Parliament.

LORD STANLEY'S REPORT ON INDIAN FINANCE.

An important State paper was laid before Parliament, and ordered to be printed on the 14th February. It is no less than Lord Stanley's "Review of the Finances of India, as shown in the actual accounts of 1856-57, and as estimated for 1857-58 and 1858-59." This paper bears date the India-office, 19th of January, 1859, and is addressed to the Governor General of India in Council. The accounts for the year 1855-56 exhibit a total (Indian) revenue of Rs. 32,08,90,650, and charges of Rs. 30,35,12,781. This leaves an (Indian) surplus of Rs. 1,73,77,869, but the "home charges" of Rs. 2,78,38,516 convert it into a deficit of Rs. 1,04,60,647. In 1856-57 the revenues amounted to Rs. 33,30,33,912, and the charges to Rs. 30,79,90,749, leaving an (Indian) surplus of Rs. 2,50,43,163, which was again converted, by "home charges" amounting to Rs. 2,68,37,700, into a deficit of Rs. 17,94,537. The aggregate receipts from land revenue in 1856-57 amounted to Rs. 17,71,75,804, being a general improvement of Rs. 72,11,182 as compared with the preceding year. Customs (excluding salt) fell off in 1856-57 by Rs. 7,86,265. Salt sales and duties yielded Rs. 3,09,87,107, being 11,69,476 in excess of the amount realised in the previous year. The net receipts from that important item of revenue opium amounted to Rs. 3,85,63,712, being Rs. 10,39,044 less than in the previous year. "Sayer and Abkary" yielded Rs. 1,42,13,644. The largely increased importation of silver continued in 1856-57, and the net profits of the three mints of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay (including the profits on the copper coinage), exceeded by Rs. 6,47,234 the net profit of the previous year.

Under "public works" there was an increased receipt of nearly twenty-nine lacs of rupees, but this was in a great degree nominal. Lord Stanley regards this (generally) progressive movement of the revenue as satisfactory. As regards the charges, it is stated that the civil charges extraordinary exhibited a decrease, and the military charges, ordinary and extraordinary, an increase (in 1856-57) of Rs. 18,70,861; in the marine and naval charges there was also a net increase of Rs. 8,94,223. On the whole, as regards both revenue and charges, the financial result of the year 1856-57 is pronounced by Lord Stanley to be a decided improvement as compared with the result of the previous year, and the financial position and prospects of India were most encouraging when the mutiny of the Bengal army broke out and upset everything.

The gross revenues of India are estimated for 1857-58 at Rs. 31,54,39,759, and for 1858-59 at Rs. 33,01,60,202. The charges of 1857-58 are estimated at Rs. 34,42,22,703, and those of 1858-59 at Rs. 39,74,32,849. Lord Stanley estimates the "final deficit" of 1857-58, which is wholly attributable to the mutiny, at Rs. 9,00,00,000, and that of 1858-59 at Rs. 12,50,00,000, making a gross total of Rs. 21,50,00,000, and to this should be added 1,00,00,000, "the sum in which the expenditure on public works extraordinary in the above two years was less in each year than the amount expended on the same account in 1856-57;" this being done, the probable deterioration in 1857-58 and 1858-59 is estimated at Rs. 22,50,00,000. As a set off against this fearful sum, there will be the forfeiture of pensions and the confiscation of the property of rebels. The estimates for 1859-60 are being prepared. Lord Stanley tells the Governor-General that he shall resort to a further loan in this country with the very greatest reluctance, but that under actual circumstances "such a step appears to be inevitable." The Gov. General, however, is strongly urged to depend solely on local resources for the ways and means required by the Indian Government, so that this loan may be the last to be raised in England. The whole debt of India appears to amount to £74,543,167, of which £18,573,781 has been contracted within the last two years. Lord Stanley, on the strength of this startling fact, recurs to the subject of loans, denounces the system of raising such loans to meet the general expenditure of the State as "most disastrous," and calls the serious attention of the Governor General and his Council to the question how otherwise to meet the heavy disbursements at present entailed for years to come by recent events. And the Governor General is required to state his own "views" on the subject without delay.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

The directors of this company state in their report that they accepted the tender made by Messrs. Brassey, Wythes, and Sir Joseph Paxton for the construction of the whole of the works of the railway from Calcutta to Kooshtee. The tender thus accepted does not exceed the estimate, the amount being £1,045,000 for the whole 108 miles, and it covers the cost of all works, station buildings, rolling stock and everything requisite for opening and working the line in 1861, except the inconsiderable import duties in India, and the manufacture of the rails and chairs; their carriage, however, to India is included in the above amount. The estimated cost of these rails and chairs is £160,000, which, together with the above-named sum, would make the aggregate cost of the whole works, and of bringing the line into complete working order, equal to the sum of £1,205,000. To this must be added the expenses of the company's engineering and other establishments, including passage money, all which is roughly estimated at £85,000. The cost of the railway would, therefore, from the last-mentioned data, be about £12,000 per mile. The local Government have afforded every possible facility and support to the officers of the company in India, and after due consideration adopted the views of Mr. Purdon, the company's chief engineer, with respect to fixing the site of the Calcutta station and terminus of the railway at Sealdah. The first twenty-five miles of the line out of Calcutta have been resurveyed and finally determined upon, and the land required was being handed over by the local Government to the officers of the company with the greatest possible despatch. The capital account with the Government of India shows at credit on the 31st of December last £320,124. This sum, together with the anticipated payments in full on shares, will, it is considered, be sufficient for the whole expenditure of the current year.

The capital account shows that £347,476 had been received, and £14,935 expended, leaving a balance of £332,541.

MISCELLANEOUS.

APPOINTMENTS.—JAPAN (Foreign-office, Feb. 21).—The Queen has been pleased to appoint George Staunton Morrison, Esq., now Secretary to her Majesty's Superintendency in China, to be H.M.'s Consul at Nagasaki, in Japan; and C. P. Hodgson, Esq., now British Vice-Consul at Caen, to be H.M.'s Consul at Hakodadi, in Japan.—Gazette, Feb. 25.

MR. BEHNES, THE SCULPTOR, who was the successful competitor for the bronze statue of the late Sir Henry Havelock, K.C.B., to be placed in Trafalgar-square, also intends sending in models to compete for the statue of the hero about to be erected at Sunderland, to be delivered on the 1st of March. The same artist was also selected to execute a bust of Sir Henry for the Court of Common Council, which is now placed in the Guildhall; and we learn that it is contemplated by the committee of the Havelock Memorial in Trafalgar-square to commission Mr. Behnes to execute a marble bust of the late general, with a view of presenting it to Lady Havelock.

SIR R. HAMILTON, BART.—Her Majesty has been pleased, on the recommendation of Lord Stanley, to approve the appointment of Sir R. N. C. Hamilton, Bart., as provisional member of the council of the Governor General of India.

SIR JAMES OUTRAM, G.C.B.—At a meeting of the Common Council, on Thursday, Feb. 24th, the town clerk read the following communication, which was ordered to be inserted in the journals of the court:—

"To Mr. Serjeant Merewether, Town Clerk of the City of London.

"Lieut. general Sir James Outram presents his respectful compliments to the town clerk of the city of London, and begs to acknowledge his note of the 1st Dec., 1858, forwarding to him a copy of the resolution passed by the Court of Common Council on the 7th Oct. last, voting him the freedom of the city, with a sword of the value of 100 guineas.

"Sir James Outram acknowledges, with feelings of the deepest gratitude, these distinguished marks of the favour and approbation of the Common Council.

"The honour of being enrolled as a liveryman of the first city in the world is one that is coveted by every Englishman.

"This honour is enhanced by the gratifying expression of the sense entertained of his military services, and by the valuable and highly-prized gift by which it is accompanied. The sword will remain with him through life, as a gratifying memento of the honour conferred on him, and will be bequeathed to his descendants as an heirloom of unspeakable value.

"Sir James Outram feels bound to take this opportunity to offer a few remarks on the discussion, as reported in the Times of the 8th Oct. last, which led to the above resolution in his favour.

"He feels most gratefully the generous warmth with which an honourable speaker eulogised his services, but he is in honour bound to disclaim much of the credit ascribed to him, which is due alone to his great commander, Lord Clyde. The withdrawal of the Lucknow garrison, the credit of which is assigned to Sir James, was planned by Lord Clyde, and effected under the protection of the troops immediately under his lordship's command, Sir James Outram merely carrying out his chief's orders. In like manner were the operations which resulted in the capture of that city entirely planned by Lord Clyde, Sir James Outram merely carrying out such portions of the subordinate operations as were entrusted to him. Neither can Sir James Outram claim the credit attributed to him of having 'headed the storming party,' 'made the breach,' or being the 'first to scale the heights,' and most earnestly does he disavow any title to be regarded as on that occasion 'though second everywhere, the first.'

"Calcutta, Jan. 12, 1859."

THE ORIENTAL INLAND STEAM COMPANY.—This company have concluded contracts for two new steamers and two new trains of barges, consisting in all of twelve vessels of large size. These vessels will, at an early period, be added to the other vessels of the company already in India for navigating the great rivers of that country. The engines of the new vessels, which will be high-pressure engines, are intended to work to 800 horse-power.

HER MAJESTY'S LEVEE.—The following were among the presentations to the Queen at her Majesty's first levee of the season, held at St. James's-palace, on the 23rd ult.:—Capt. F. R. Aikman, on his return from India; Lieut. George Arbuthnot, on return from active service in India; Mr. Wm. Arbuthnot, on taking his seat as a member of the Council of India; Sir J. Arnould, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Bombay, on having received the honour of Knighthood, and on his departure for India; Lieut. S. Cary, on return from India; Commander R. Cator, on promotion and return from China and Japan; Mr. C. Mills, Maj. gen. Sir R. Vivian, and Mr. J. P. Willoughby, on taking their seats as members of the Council of India; Mr. H. T. Prinsep, ditto; Col. Sir P. Cantley, K.C.B., ditto; Lieut. col. Sir H. Rawlinson, K.C.B., ditto; Mr. E. M'Naghten, ditto; Sir J. W. Hogg, Bart., ditto; Sir F. Currie, Bart., ditto; Mr. W. BOTTLES FOR PREVENTING ACCIDENTAL POISONING.—Messrs. Savory and Moore have forwarded for our inspection a specimen of a bottle they have patented to obviate the frequent recurrence of accidental poisoning, which has of late excited so much painful attention. The object sought to be obtained was a bottle which should present so marked and sensible a difference in appearance, touch, and use to those employed for ordinary purposes, that the possibility of mistakes should be avoided. Messrs. Savory, we think, have been perfectly successful in accomplishing this aim, and the director-general of the army medical department has given instructions, after testing their value, that all poisonous and potent medicines supplied for the use of the army, be in future contained in these bottles. We extract from the Lancet the following accurate description of the invention:—

"In shape the bottles are hexangular, with deep flutings or grooves running lengthways along the bottle. To the sight and touch they instantaneously present most striking points of difference to any other kind of bottle. Vessels of this description, made in blue glass, are intended to be used for external applications only. For poisonous and powerful medicines, prepared or not from prescriptions, the dose of which is a teaspoonful and under, bottles similarly shaped and fluted in white glass are proposed to be employed. The bottles are provided with an entirely new contrivance, the effect of which is to make it impossible to pour out the contents otherwise than very slowly and gradually, almost drop by drop. This is accomplished by the very simple and inexpensive plan of contracting the neck of the bottle at the lower part of the shoulder, and the mouth being of the usual size, the process of filling is but slightly affected by the contraction. The very deliberate and cautious action thus produced will, it is believed, deter any one from taking over doses of medicine; while it is difficult to imagine a case in which a person could pour out and take the whole contents of one of these bottles in mistake for something else. To illustrate the manner in which the patent bottle acts in comparison with ordinary ones, it may be mentioned that not more than a teaspoonful would come out of the one in the same time that an ordinary phial would take to discharge its entire contents. A person being about to take a wrong medicine—say laudanum, contained in a patent bottle—on proceeding to pour it out would be struck by finding that, instead of the whole draught having run into the wine-glass at once, as usual, merely a teaspoonful would have left the bottle. This would naturally lead to an examination of the label, and the consequent discovery of the dangerous error. Although to empty even a two-ounce bottle would tire the hand and arm of the holder, yet when only the proper dose is sought to be withdrawn the patience is not taxed in the slightest degree."

The Armies of the Great Powers. By Lascelles Wrexall. London: Wm. H. Allen and Co.

A more seasonable contribution to the literature of the day than Mr. Wrexall's account of the European armies can scarcely be imagined. Within the dimensions of a convenient octavo volume he has condensed all the information every one desires to possess on the subject of the armaments of the great military Powers. Their means of aggression or defence are set forth clearly and perspicuously, and almost at a glance the general reader is enabled to form a correct idea of the relative chances of success in the event of a protracted war. Not only the numerical strength of each army is given, but also the fullest details of its organisation. The different systems of discipline, the dress and accoutrements, the rewards and punishments, and the general internal economy of the European armies, are described in plain unvarnished language, such as not even the least military reader can fail to comprehend. Mr. Wrexall's impartiality is also worthy of praise, though he may possibly at times exhibit a bias towards the French army not altogether agreeable to the amour propre of John Bull. However, it must be admitted that he allows full credit for the excellence of the English engineers and artillery, whom he appears to consider as superior to those of any other nation in the world. In addition to the armies of Austria, France, Great Britain, and Prussia, we find supplemental chapters devoted to the Turkish and Sardinian troops; nor may we overlook the retrospective glance at the composition of the East-India Company's forces. In short, we are indebted to Mr. Wrexall for having compiled in the most faithful manner a vast mass of information relating to a topic of universal interest, which could not previously be obtained without constant and troublesome reference to half a dozen contradictory authorities.

The Universal Review. No. 1. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

It is not the practice of this journal to notice any works, whether of a standard or an ephemeral nature, that do not in some way relate to the East. The advent of a new monthly review, however special its character, would consequently have passed without remark had it not contained at least one article touching on Indian affairs. It so happens that the question ventilated in the first number of this seemingly comprehensive and cosmopolitan Review is the urgently important one of Indian Finance. The statistics on which the reviewer relies for the accuracy of his statements, and the deductions derived from them, are apparently the same as those employed by Lord Stanley in his very lucid speech on introducing the subject of the new loan. The financial position of India, however, is more elaborately portrayed than would have been suitable for an exposition such as that made by the noble lord to Parliament. The colours employed are, perhaps, less bright and promising, but the general fidelity of the picture is not a whit inferior. The idea of an income tax is repudiated with vehemence, although it is admitted that there are few if any other sources of revenue. This is the only weak point in the article, that it fails to impart confidence as to the future. With the present it deals admirably, but not even a corner of the veil is raised that divides the real from the prophetic. This inevitable defect notwithstanding, we would earnestly direct the attention of the British public to this very clear statement of the finance of British India.

MAPS OF INDIA &amp; CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £3; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £3; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies, and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of the BURMAN EMPIRE, showing the Annexed District of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or, on cloth, in a case, 5s.

A MAP of the WESTERN PROVINCES of HINDOOSTAN, the PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c., including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £2; or, with rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

MAP of ARABIA, from all the most recent Authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 4 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

is allowed, by upwards of 200 Medical Gentlemen, to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided: a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body, two inches below the hips, being sent to the Manufacturer.

BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, New

Road, London.—MORISON'S VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE is the only medicine that strikes at the root of all disease. This has been proved by an experience of thirty years, during which time upwards of 400,000 cases of cure have been effected. The Hygienic agents throughout the world are unanimous upon the Hygienic system of medicine introduced by James Morison, the Hygeist, who not only taught the public how to cure their own ailments, but also rescued the world from the dangers of false medical doctrine. The monument lately raised to his memory, by a penny subscription, sufficiently attests the importance of his discoveries.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—When we consider

how uncertain are life and health, and their value is appreciated by all human beings, it is strange indeed to observe how often men neglect the means of preserving these blessings at even the most trifling cost. They pay heavily to insure their premises from fire, or their goods from accident on flood and field, but they often put off until it is too late the expenditure of a few shillings on a box of Holloway's Pills, which they might keep by them as an unfailing safeguard, as a charm which will protect the possessor against all diseases. They must certainly do good, if used according to instructions given with each box.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of chemically prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

Mr. EPHRAIM MOSELEY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unobtainable; and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

THE FIRST NUMBER OF

THE UNIVERSAL REVIEW

OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND SOCIAL SCIENCE.

IN announcing to the public the advent of a new Periodical, the Proprietors do not consider it necessary to vindicate, beforehand, their claim to any exclusive position, or to prove the existence of any special want which it shall be their aim to satisfy. They prefer at once to brave the charge of self-complacency, and to say they have determined on addressing the world, because they believe they can persuade the world to listen to them. By way of preface, however, they think it right to offer a few explanatory remarks on the several departments of Politics, Literature, and Social Science, which will month by month pass under review.

In the POLITICAL DEPARTMENT, their attention will be directed to the co-ordination of popular measures with the maintenance of the true conservative principles. They have firm faith in the excellence of the Constitution under which they live. But between those who would preserve it by a periodical re-adjustment of its parts according to the various requirements of successive epochs, and those who believe that its machinery as designed at the Revolution is adapted for all time, there is an essential and a practical difference. It is under the banner of the first-mentioned class of Conservatives that the Proprietors of the UNIVERSAL REVIEW profess to enrol themselves; and they are happy in the conviction that the Government which at present administers the destinies of this country will be found to regulate their policy by the principles of constitutional progress.

In FOREIGN AFFAIRS the Proprietors will recommend an attitude of vigilant neutrality, in the belief that the people of this country now recognise as an historical fact that British interference in the affairs of Continental nations is productive of but little good; and that the resources of Great Britain will be expended more beneficially to herself and others in maintaining inviolate the asylum which she affords to political sufferers than in seeking to promote their cause by a policy of aggression. To this end, however, it is absolutely necessary that our naval and military establishments should be kept in the highest possible state of efficiency, and papers relating to this subject will form a prominent feature in the UNIVERSAL REVIEW.

In all ECCLESIASTICAL QUESTIONS the Church of England will receive an earnest and affectionate support; and whenever her position and accidents may come under the consideration of the Legislature, the integrity of her constitution and the sanctity of her ancient creed will be firmly and vigorously upheld.

During the PARLIAMENTARY SESSION an article will appear in each number containing a condensation of the month's debates, with such comments as may serve to elucidate the topics of the day. Particular questions will occasionally be discussed separately and at greater length, but it is not anticipated that articles of this special character will be of frequent occurrence. The great public meetings that are held during the recess, and which constitute in themselves a kind of irregular Parliament, will also be treated according to their interest and importance.

In LITERATURE, the method which the Proprietors of the UNIVERSAL REVIEW intend to pursue is easily indicated. In this department they would feel still less difficulty, were they so inclined, in defining a peculiar field for their exertions. It would be possible to mark out a distinction which should separate their treatment of books and subjects, on the one hand, from the brevity and haste to which newspaper articles are necessarily liable; and, on the other, from the infrequency of publication that attaches to the regular quarterly organs of literature, and which so often prevents them from delivering their judgment, however valuable and conclusive, until the topic has been well nigh exhausted by earlier if less weighty writers. From the monthly magazines, with which they might seem likely to come into still closer competition, they might claim to be distinguished by the fact of their Review being primarily intended for critical purposes, and not—except in very rare instances—as a repository of the lighter class of articles that form the staple of most monthly periodicals. But in this respect, also, they prefer to rest their claims for public support on the broader and simpler grounds indicated in the opening paragraph. The progress of Foreign Literature will be duly noted in their columns, and all foreign works of interest introduced as speedily as possible to the knowledge of their readers.

The large class of subjects which are at present somewhat vaguely comprehended under the title of SOCIAL SCIENCE, will be carefully and conscientiously analysed in the UNIVERSAL REVIEW. But as that "Science" is obviously in its infancy, any discussions based upon it must at present be rather experimental than judicial. On the Philosophy of Society—supposing that such a philosophy exists—and on questions of social and sanitary reform, upon which so many able authorities are so widely at variance, it would be premature to promise anything like final or exhaustive treatment. It is proposed, however, under this head, to take due notice of the meetings that may be held, or the books that may be written on these and cognate subjects, and to sum up from time to time the most trustworthy results that may seem to have been attained in the progress of public opinion or of individual thought.

The signal success which has in France attended upon an experiment of a similar nature to the present, encourages the hope that a Periodical distinguished by a like preponderance of the critical element, combined with the advantage which the able conductors of the Revue des deux Mondes unfortunately do not enjoy—that of free political discussion—may meet with a support, to the consolidation of which its proprietors promise that no exertion shall be wanting, either on their part or on that of their contributors.

It is requested that all Advertisements, Books for Review, and Communications for the Editor may be addressed to the care of

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Bombay mail of the 9th of February brings the gratifying intelligence of the complete termination of the Oude campaign. Elsewhere we give Lord Clyde's despatch reporting the final operations of the forces under his command, and likewise the general order for the breaking up of the army of Oude. His lordship, we regret to learn, was detained at Lucknow by ill health, but would proceed as soon as practicable to Simla, with a view to pass the hot season in the hills. The rumour as to the uxorious aspirations of the gallant veteran is now repudiated, as well as his supposed intention of returning immediately to Europe, leaving the provisional command in the hands of Sir Hugh Rose.

Jung Bahadoor, the governing minister of Nepaul, has proved his fidelity to the British Government by applying for troops to assist in driving out the fugitive rebels from the Nepaulese territories. Brigadier Horsford, in obedience to instructions from head quarters, accordingly lost no time in crossing the Raptee, and thus placing the Begum and her followers between two converging and hostile lines.

"The order by which the Oude army has been broken up reduces it from a total force of 35 regiments of infantry, 11 of cavalry, 28 companies or troops of artillery, and 5 of sappers, to 20 regiments of foot and 8 of cavalry, 17 companies or troops of artillery, and 3 of sappers. The Oude army is thus diminished by more than one-third. Of the force which remains in Oude the chief part will be concentrated at Lucknow, consisting of Soady's and Mackenzie's companies of artillery, the 1st reserve company 6th battalion Bengal artillery, and Olphert's company, the 24th company of Royal engineers, 15th Punjab pioneers, 1st battalion 23rd fusiliers, 88th Connaught Rangers, 2nd battalion of the Rifle brigade, 2nd Dragoon guards and 2nd Hodson's horse. Seetapore will be garrisoned by Hiddlestone's E troop of Royal artillery, the 4th company of the 4th battalion Bengal artillery, the 60th rifles, 1st battalion of her Majesty's 90th, and the 69th Gorkhas, the 4th and 8th irregular cavalry. Ghoruckpore will be held by the 5th company 12th battalion royal artillery, with battery; her Majesty 13th and 73rd and the Jat horse. Fyzabad by the 5th company 3rd battalion J L field battery royal artillery, her Majesty's 34th, 64th, and 9th Punjab infantry, and the 1st Hodson's horse. Roy Bareilly by the 4th company No. 3 light field battery, her Majesty's 38th and 42nd highlanders, 19th Punjab infantry, and 1st Sikh cavalry. Ghazepore by her Majesty's 37th.

"Thus Lucknow in the centre, Seetapore north-west, Fyzabad and Roy Bareilly east and south, are the chief garrisons of Oude.

"Of the 11 companies or troops of artillery which have left or are leaving Oude, Fraser's I troop goes to Meerut, Calvert's company to Benares, Le Mesurier's and Kaye's to Allahabad, Smith's to Futtehghur, Money's to Umballah, Remington's to Muttra, the 2nd company 8rd battalion and the reserve company 5th battalion Bengal artillery to Cawnpore, and the A company of Madras artillery to the Saugor districts. Of the infantry corps, H.M.'s 64th and 3rd battalion rifle brigade go to Agra, the Belooch battalion to Jhansi, H.M.'s 1st battalion 6th foot to Benares, H.M.'s 79th Highlanders and Ferozepore regiment to the Punjab, H.M.'s 1st battalion 5th fusiliers and 77th to Allahabad, H.M.'s 80th to Cawnpore, 1st battalion 8th foot to Futtehghur, H.M.'s 97th to Banda, 1st Bengal fusiliers and 93rd Highlanders to the hills at Dugahia and Subathoo, the Sirmoor battalion to Dehra Doon, and the Kumaon battalion to Kumaon. The 7th hussars go to Umballa, the 6th dragoon guards to Agra and Muttra, 9th lancers to Cawnpore, and ultimately to England. The Bengal sappers proceed to Roorkee, the Madras sappers to Banda.

"Jones's, Hagart's, Pinckney's, Eveleigh's, Taylor's, Troup's, and Purnell's brigades are broken up; Parker's, Horsford's, Rowcroft's, and Walpole's remain. Maude's battery goes home to England."

Tantia Topee and the Delhi Shahzadah are still at large, though hemmed in on all sides. On the morning of the 21st January these rebels had a narrow escape from being annihilated by a flying column under Brigadier Holmes at Seekur. The troops unfortunately halted too long, being much exhausted by their forced marches of 294 miles in twelve days, having covered fifty-two miles in the previous forty-eight hours—and thus the enemy obtained information of their unpleasant proximity.

Sir Hugh Rose is once more in the field, having undertaken to repress the depredations of the Rohillas in the Nizam's dominions and the adjacent province of Berar. As the Rohillas occupy some strong forts near Jaulnah, it has been found necessary to bring up siege guns and mortars from Ahmednuggur.

In the southern Madras Presidency serious disturbances have again taken place on religious grounds. The Brahmans at Nagarcoil affect to believe that the Royal Proclamation sanctions the revival of customs and usages that had fallen into desuetude. Acting on this assumption, they insisted that the female Christian converts of the Shanar caste should abandon their new practice of covering their bosoms, and revert to the less decent habits of their ancestors. The missionaries naturally took up the cause of their converts, whereupon a riot ensued, and the mission chapel was burned to the ground.

Under the head of General Orders will be found a notification intimating that the receipt of promissory notes of the four per cent., three and a half per cent., and four and a half per cent. loans and transfer loan securities in part subscription to the open five per cent. loan will be closed after the 30th April next; and also that the sub-treasurers at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay have been authorised to receive money for the purchase of Treasury Bills, payable to order, and bearing interest at the rate of three pie per cent., or one-fourth of an anna a day for every one hundred rupees.

The Viceroy of India returned to Calcutta on Monday, Jan. 24.

We have reason to believe that twenty-four junior appointments in the Engineer Establishment, and twenty-four junior appointments in the Upper Subordinate Establishment of the Department of Public Works in India, are open to public competition. As the subjects and mode of examination have been published exclusively in the Times, it may be inferred that only readers of that journal will be permitted to present themselves as candidates.

The second reading of the East India Loan Bill was passed by the House of Commons last night, after a lengthened discussion, in which Sir G. C. Lewis, Mr. Bright, Mr. Ayrton, and Mr. Wilson bore the chief parts.

GOVERNMENT MESSAGES.

To James Cosmo Melvill, Esq., India Office, London, from the Secretary to Government, Bombay:—

OUDE.

A private telegram from Lucknow states that the Nepaulese have applied for British troops to enter Nepaul, and that Horsford's brigade has accordingly been pushed across the Raptee. Lord Clyde is indisposed, and proceeds to Simla for the season.

CENTRAL INDIA.

Tantia Topce's rear-guard was overtaken by the force under Brigadier Holmes, at Seekur, on the 21st of January. The rebel loss was 100 killed, besides a number of horses, and 500 stand of arms. Tantia Topce was making for Beekaneer or Joudhpoor on the 26th of January. Intelligence, however, from Indore of the 6th inst. states that he has turned again north in the direction of Mungowlie, in the Shekawattee country. The following were the dispositions of the forces in pursuit on the 1st inst.:—Brigadier Honner, at Amjeer; Brigadier Parke, at Nusseerabad; Brigadier Holmes, at Beelwara; Brigadier Showers, at Seekur; and General Michel, moving on Nusseerabad. The Delhi columns have also taken the field.

NIZAM'S TERRITORY.

Sir H. Rose was en route to Aurungabad on the 6th, accompanied by a field force, for the reduction of the Rohillas, who are still committing depredations in the Nizam's territory.

The Bombay Presidency is quiet.

H. L. ANDERSON,
Secretary to Government.

McGrath, on account of services performed in the Allahabad magazine and arsenal during the mutiny. A commission as captain unattached is conferred on Lieut. H. Bingham, of the veteran establishment, for gallant services performed during the recent campaigns. Captain Bingham's commission is dated Jan. 3rd, 1859.

NATIVE ROGUERY.—It is no easy matter to be alive to the scheming of native rogues. The Englishman has heard that the attention of Government has been drawn to the inferior quality of the articles composing a khilat bestowed upon a native prince and others, for which Government pays handsomely, and that advantage is taken by the subordinate native officials employed in despatching the jewellery, &c. to substitute articles of inferior value for those paid for.

BENGAL.

THE NEW LOAN.

These desperate experiments with the money market are making Government paper stink with the commercial classes, and it is easy to foretell that the result will soon be, that the Government will not be able to borrow one sixpence in this country. The effect of the notification received by the telegraph on Friday last, has been to lower the value of Government securities about three per cent. all round; and in so far as conversion is concerned, has confiscated the property of the holders to the extent of a million and a half of pounds sterling. There does not seem to be a single financier in the Government, or these reckless and desperate mistakes would be impossible. Does it never occur to these gentlemen to inquire how the negotiation of a new loan is effected in Europe? It is no answer whatever for the Government to tell us that it must have money, and must, therefore, pay the market rate for it. Its necessities are no greater than were the necessities of the Home Government in the Crimean war; and there is a right way as well as wrong for the relief of those necessities. It is imperative, where the value of money fluctuates so seriously as it does in commercial countries, that every loan should close at the very hour when it is opened; and the Government of India is bound by every consideration in policy and in morals to adopt at once the practice of European States in this matter. It hardly needs to be told how important an index the Government note furnishes to the value of money. The note is a sort of inconvertible currency, and the discount at which it is negotiable represents its deterioration as compared with gold. In such circumstances every fresh issue at par, be the interest what it may, depreciates the value of existing notes, and there is but one way to avoid this, and that is, by selling the loan to the highest bidder, as is done in Europe, and at once closing it. The keeping a governmental loan open for years together, at a fixed and arbitrary rate of interest, is one of those mischievous absurdities which could be practised nowhere but in India, and it is strange that it should so long have escaped observation. What is the effect of it? Let us suppose that the existing five per cents. are to-day worth ninety, and that Government announces a new stock at six per cent. The only effect of such an announcement will be the depreciation of fives to eighty-four, while it is not certain that Government will get a single rupee subscribed to the loan. The holders of fives would be anxious to sell, so that it would be immaterial in a week or two to the buyer, whether he bought fives at eighty-four, or sixes at par. When fives are at ninety, the natural value of a six per cent. stock is about 108, and if Government were to invite tenders for such a loan, the banks and our great capitalists would be compelled to bid for the stock its proper market value, and the depreciation of the fives would be impossible. By announcing such a stock as open to all applicants at par, and for an indefinite period, the most cruel loss is entailed upon the holders of fives and fours, as such paper becomes at once unnegotiable but at a heavy discount; since the investor can go to the treasury at any time, and take up a note at six per cent. by paying 500 rupees for it. By the present system a severe loss is inflicted upon the holders of former securities, while it by no means follows that the new ones are taken up at all. The effect of this notification is simply to reduce the fives and fours to their just value, as compared with the new fund, which may remain untouched by any parties, and have to be withdrawn as a failure. The notification under review announces a new loan at 5 11-16 per cent.; and, taking the previous value of fives at 91 or 92, such a loan ought to have commanded a premium of two or three per cent., and might doubtless have been negotiated at that rate, had due notice been given to the commercial classes. It is well enough known that our banks are sometimes burdened with a plethora of deposits, especially when no good is to be done in exchanges, and it is certain that large investments would be made from these quarters, were the proper mode adopted by the State in negotiating the loans. The only legitimate channel for spreading these notes throughout the community is the monied interest of the country, and until this fact is recognised, and the Government pledges itself to abstain from any other mode of raising funds, there must be constant embarrassment on the one side, and disgust on the other.—Bombay Times.

BRITISH RULE IN INDIA.

Few will deny that the rebellion and all the unpopularity of the British rule from which it sprung are the result of (so to speak) a deep misunderstanding between the governors and the governed in India. The British Government was suspected, and its motives misinterpreted. It was in consequence hated. It is not in these columns that the faults of that Government will find a screen or be lightly dealt with. But with all these faults, we maintain the British Government in India has been one of the best intentioned and most beneficent Governments ever administered by man. At the same time, it must be borne in mind that those whom it has been called upon to govern form one of the mildest and most docile of races, a people extremely impressionable by manifestations of good will and kindness. What, then, is it that has implanted an almost ineradicable mistrust and hatred in the minds of such a people against such a Government? We repeat, a want of proper understanding between the governors and the governed. It is because the British Government of India has never trusted the people of India—it is because in its loftiest conceptions that Government has never essayed to be the organ of the national will; it is because even when governing India for India it has never made even the feint of governing India by India, that it has failed to make its beneficence known and its character appreciated. Perhaps in the history of British domination not another instance will be found of so much forbearance and abnegation of national pretensions as have characterised the conduct of the past Government of British India. For the good of its native population that Government has sacrificed the pride of race, popularity, national support, even the approbation of posterity. All these sacrifices remain unacknowledged.

We admit the full force of the apology which some may offer, founded on the difference of race. The difference of race, we admit, will, under the best circumstances, be a fruitful source of misunderstanding. Two races, which, habitually, in the politest manner possible, bandy at each other such terms as nigger and mlecha, will always as politely doubt each other's words, and put the worst possible construction on each other's motives. We suppose it is accounted an impossibility that these amiable relations should ever be modified. But after all that the difference of race will excuse or account for, there remains a vast amount of duty unfulfilled on the one side, and interest unperceived on the other, which should not thus lie unfulfilled and unperceived. In the conduct of private life the nigger finds no difficulty to deal with the mlecha and the mlecha with the nigger. Both, then, not only sink the worse disagreements attributable to the difference of race, but find positive advantage to each other in the existence of that difference. Why should, then, in public and national matters—in matters which call forth into relief few of the peculiarities which difference of race implies—there be a greater deficiency of the spirit of accommodation than in private concerns? The difference of race may justify social isolation, absence of "European colonisation," a slow "development of the resources of the country," and even competitive examinations for the civil service in London; but we fail to perceive in it any justification either of the "atrocities" or of the "retribution." Had Englishmen settled in India as they have settled in other parts of the world inhabited by aboriginal races, and then created or met with the antagonism of race, we could have understood the reason and recognised the necessity of an incessant combat between adverse ideas and adverse interests. But Englishmen hitherto have been in India chiefly in the character of governors, bound in duty and obligation to act in the character of benefactors only. That they should have failed in acting in that capacity, or in making the impression it was their paid and appointed office to create is not attributable to a difference of race, for who refuses a benefit because it comes from the hands of a nigger or a mleccha? but to errors in policy, for who can tolerate systematic insult and injury? systematic insult in matters however trivial, systematic injuries to interests however unimportant?

And the British rule in India has inflicted both. It is a fact historically accepted that the British rule was in most parts of the country originally invited as a blessing. Nothing further from a conquest by arms than was that which gave to England the first provinces of her Indian Empire. The rule was really popular. What, then, led to the change of opinion which culminated in the mutinies? The problem is not inscrutable. The Englishmen who came out as rulers at once assumed as an axiom that theirs was a civilisation better than the one they had come officially in contact with; and they proceeded on the maxim that the better civilisation must swallow up the worse one. The rulers at once repudiated the opinion of the ruled, and sought only to promote their interests. A nation with such a long past as the people of India would not brook such ignoring of their antecedents. The insult came to be felt. Again the Englishmen who came out to govern India were themselves dissociated from all society bound by tradition and institutions. They took Indian society to be the same tabula rasa their own minds and their bank-books were.

They began to experimentalise upon organisms millenniums old. They would abolish ceremony, caste, aristocracy, municipalism and all self-government, and they essayed to do so by means of lengthy minutes and surveys and settlements. The Government complacently took upon itself to be paterfamilias where its true function was to be major-domo.

Was it possible that the humiliation and the injury should not be felt, and when felt in their fulness resented? Could it be in human nature to reconcile itself to the loss of every right save that of growing rich, faring comfortably, travelling quickly, and receiving messages at lightning speed? Sentiments which all men hold dear and Asiatics doat upon were outraged without the slightest compunction, in obedience to theories. The people of India refused their sanction to obedience to theories.

England has a mission in India. It does not always produce an effect to deny a truism. But that mission is not to resume enams, supersede punchayets, teach ryots reading, writing, and cyphering, "eliminate" ancient principles, appoint police chowkeedars to watch village drains, levy taxes at toll-bars, enforce shoe regulations, institute salaried patriarchs, write occasional minutes, publish periodical reports, develop the resources of coal-mines, or even to make the Bible a college class-book. There are higher things to do. The man who has to save a fellow-creature from drowning does not stand on the bank beckoning the sinking body to rise on pain of chastisement, but dives into the torrent, clings round the drowning being, and, depending on his own energies and buoyancy, brings him safe to shore.

In all senses but the one which prophetic politicians use, the British power in India may be permanent, if it obeys but the first law of all civil government. Government, even in conquered territory, cannot fail to be the people's organ without ceasing to be itself.—Hindoo Patriot.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CULTIVATION OF THE TEA PLANT.—Five years ago, Mr. Mark Thornhill, the then superintendent, exerted himself most earnestly to stimulate the growth of tea by the native landholders, offering them land on most advantageous terms, and similar conditions for the purchase of the raw leaf. None would undertake it, they simply shrank from the delay, and the small sum which would have to be locked up till a profit was made. At the same time Colonel Elwall (retired list) with another gentleman, took a few hundred acres of land at Hurbunswala, as a farming speculation. It may be doubted whether either of them had ever before seen a tea-plant. The first year little or nothing was done; some three or four acres were planted, but probably no great skill or care was used, for half the plants died. In the four succeeding years, however, some hundred and thirty acres were filled in, and we understand that the crop for 1858 is estimated at ten thousand pounds av. We cannot speak with any degree of certainty as to the outlay; but we believe from common report that, with the present rate of ruling prices, a return of upwards of cent. per cent. may be fairly assumed. A visit to this plantation has enabled many persons to form an opinion on the subject of tea-growing; and although there are natural limits to politeness on one side and curiosity on the other, sufficient information would, doubtless, be afforded by the managing proprietor to any one duly introduced, such, that is, as to enable the visitor to understand the scene before him. He will find bushes of five years old being picked, and yielding three or four hundred pounds of tea per acre, which will sell on the spot for five shillings a pound; the seed plots with their young plants; the blinds of straw stretched over the seedlings to temper the rays of the summer sun until they are dug out and planted in the garden, and a certain amount of artificial irrigation applied during the hot months. These labours he will find performed by men, mostly from Oude and the eastern districts, on monthly wages of eight shillings, who are housed in the village, supplied with tools by the estate, and tended in sickness by the managing proprietor. No Chinamen are employed, in the small, but neat and inexpensive factory; the process of making the tea is successfully carried on by the Hindustanis attached to the concern, and the article sells at the prices averaged above. The whole expense of thus managing one hundred acres of tea garden may be estimated at £800 annually, besides the subsistence of the European manager, and the interest on the capital invested. In the first year the return is almost nil, and it is not till the fourth that it begins to exceed the outlay; but from that time all is plain sailing. The rough calculation given below represents what would be realized, under favourable circumstances, and with proper care and skill:—

Expense per 100 acres.	Yield per 100 acres.
1st year....£800	Nil.
2nd year....£800	1,000 lbs. at 5s. per lb. 250
3rd year....£800	5,000 lbs. " " 1,250
4th year....£800	30,000 lbs. " " 7,500
Four years' interest on, say £1,000 at ten per cent.	£400 Deduct profit " 5,400

piece-meal and gradually, as was done at Hurbunswala. It is quite conjectural, and is higher than would be realised in practice.] Now a profit of even half of £5,400 leaves a handsome subsistence for a European family for their first four years of struggling; but we must remember that thereafter the yearly account is, for extraordinary luck and management, represented by a gain of £7,500 on an expenditure of £900, or upwards of six thousand a year on one hundred acres. A company with a joint stock of £3,000 could work an estate of far more than five times this extent, because, in fact, the expense would not increase proportionably to the extension of land. With reference to indigo and coffee, statistics are less accessible, and it is not easy to say more than this, viz., that these articles grow well in the Doon. But there can be little doubt that if Government will give grants of one to two thousand acres to an European proprietary on a moderate rent and a perpetual settlement, and if the settlers will lay themselves out to procure labourers, will support them from their capital, and will treat them with firmness, judgment, and due consideration, then the two crops of tea and coffee may be grown to an enormous profit. Excellent roads cross the district; irrigating canals are already numerous; there is an extensive demand at Landour, Mussoorie, and Dehra; and the Ganges Canal, whose head at Hurdwar is only twenty-five miles from Dehra, conveys goods to Cawnpore at a rupee per maund, a little more than fifty shillings a ton, so that even if the markets here were glutted a profitable sale could still be commanded down-country.—Calcutta Review, December.

SALE OF HUMAN BEINGS IN INDIA.—Will it be believed that in the present day, in the ordinarily quiet and settled district of Monghyr, a Hindoo father lately sold his son for three rupees and a piece of cloth to a Mahomedan, to be brought up as a Mahomedan—nay, to one of a gang of eunuchs, for the express purpose of being added to their number, and of being afterwards devoted to a life of such vice and infamy that the thought of it almost makes one forget the savage cruelty of the crime first perpetrated! Will it be believed that the same man sold two of his children for this hellish purpose, and that such transactions are very common in the district, and that the deeds of sale were, till lately, openly registered in the public record office by our native officials, as if they embodied the most meritorious of contracts? Yes, all that is true, and he who doubts it is referred to the last number of Mr. Sevestre's reports of cases in the Sudder Court, where he may read the very clear but most painful statement of Mr. Toogood, the energetic magistrate of Monghyr, by whom the practices were brought to light, and some of the miscreants concerned were detected. We can but regret that, when they had been tried and convicted, they should have received a sentence so miserably inadequate to the heinousness of their offence as is that passed upon them by the Sudder Court. Undoubtedly a nation which undertakes to govern others, whose religious belief and whose views of right and wrong, so far as connected with religion, differ essentially from its own, must be content to suffer much evil to be done and to leave much good undone. The British rulers of India have been and are, content to overlook much that is repugnant to their own feelings and principles; but there are certain practices so wicked and destructive that they cannot be tolerated save through a repudiation of the first duty of Government—the protection of the lives of the governed. Therefore it is that we have put down suttee, and human sacrifice, and (so far as we could) infanticide, notwithstanding all appeals to religion and conscience; that is to say, we have not indulged the conscience of one man to the extent of allowing him to put to death another who is equally entitled to our protection however irresistible may be, in the opinion of the governed, the authorities in favour of such a course. But when we find that practices still more cruel, and not only repugnant to Christian and human feelings, but expressly condemned by the Hindoo and Mahomedan laws and religion, are carried on in the oldest part of the British possessions, with the full knowledge, and in some cases with the express countenance of our native officials, surely every one will admit that the most vigorous and immediate action of the Government ought to be employed to eradicate by the most unflinching severity a crime which we cannot suffer to continue without making ourselves accomplices,—to protect helpless children from the systematic destruction of both body and soul inflicted by their own faithless parents and countrymen.—Hurkaru.

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS.—In the exercise of the powers vested in the Governor General of India, his Excellency has been pleased to appoint the Hon. Sir Charles Jackson, Kt., one of the judges of the Supreme Court at Bengal, to be a member of the Council of India for making laws and regulations. His Excellency has also been pleased to appoint Mr. W. Ritchie, Advocate General in Bengal, to be Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University.

LORD CANNING, Viceroy and Governor General of India, arrived at Calcutta on Monday afternoon, the 24th Jan., and was received by the Civil and Military Officers of Government, 500 men of the 99th Regiment attending as a guard of honour. His Lordship is described as having looked very well and hearty.

THE NAWAB OF FURRUCKABAD arrived at Futtehghur on the 29th January under an escort of some mounted police. He is to be tried by a commission composed of the Judges of Futtehghur, Cawnpore, and Shajehanpore—viz., Mr. Batten, Judge of Cawnpore, president; Mr. A. Ross, Judge of Futtehghur; and Mr. Wynard, Judge of Shajehanpore, members. Mr. Robertson, of the "Rebel Commission," is appointed public prosecutor on behalf of Government. The Nawab is to be defended by English barristers and counsel.

BANK OF BENGAL.—At an extraordinary meeting of the directors, on the 25th of January, the rates of the Bank of Bengal were raised 1 per cent. all round. The rates are therefore as follows:—"Discount. Private bills and notes at or within three months, 9 per cent.; promissory notes with one name, protected by security of Company's paper, at or within ninety days, 7 per cent.; Government acceptances, do., do., 6 per cent.; mint certificates, 5 per cent. Interest charged. On fixed loans not exceeding ninety days, on deposit of Company's paper, 8 per cent.; on deposit of goods, 9 per cent.; on cash credits, not exceeding forty-five days, on deposit of Company's paper, 8 per cent.; on deposit of goods, 9 per cent. No credit opened for a less sum than Rs. 5,000. A commission of one-eighth per cent. charged on the amount of the credit."

JUNG BAHADOOR.—We (Bombay Standard) learn by letters from Lucknow of the 25th Jan., that Jung Bahadoor has taken up a decisive position with regard to the Oude rebels, who have taken refuge within the borders of Nepal. He has issued a proclamation to the effect that all murderers and rebels in arms who enter the Nepal territory, are to be given up to the British Government, and all large armed bodies will be utterly destroyed. We also learn by telegraph from Lucknow of the 4th Feb., that Jung Bahadoor of Nepal, having applied to Lord Clyde for the aid of British troops to assist in reducing the rebels, now refugees in his territory, Lord Clyde ordered Brigadier Horsford to advance into Nepal. Brigadier Horsford accordingly has crossed the Raptree, for the purpose of joining the Ghoorka army. The rebels under Beni Mahdo, Nana Sahib, and others were at no great distance from Bankee in Nepal. The same telegram announces that Lord Clyde is indisposed.

MR. RICKETS.—We regret to hear that ill health has compelled Mr. Rickets to leave Calcutta for a change of air. Though his intention is to return within a month, his absence must be felt much in the Supreme Council of India, which at present is reduced to two members only; so that on any point not involving a legal question the President of the Council is absolute master.

FINANCIAL SECRETARY.—It is reported that the office of Financial Secretary to the Government of India is likely to be vacant very shortly, Mr. C. H. Lushington being about to proceed to England on full furlough, preparatory to retiring from the service.

BEHAR.—Advices from Behar state that the prospects of the poppy sowings in that district are most favourable. The crops have luxuriantly grown throughout the fields in consequence of a good shower which fell in the middle of December. The produce is anticipated to be nearly double that of the last year.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF THE N. W. P.—We learn by a Gazette Extraordinary from the Governor General's Camp, dated Allahabad, Jan. 20, that, subject to the approbation of her Majesty, the Right Honourable the Viceroy and Governor General of India has been pleased to appoint Mr. George Frederic Edmonstone, of the Bengal Civil Service, Lieutenant Governor of the North Western Provinces of the Bengal Presidency, and that the honourable gentleman, having taken the prescribed oaths, assumed on that day the office under the salute due to his rank.

DELHI, 28th Jan.—Since Thursday we have been on the qui vive. Tantia Topee is in our vicinity, trying to get into the Punjab. Brigadier Showers, from Agra, is in pursuit. A column has gone from here, too, consisting of H.M.'s 61st regiment, some horse artillery, with two guns and some Sikh cavalry. The 2nd fusiliers in the fort are the only Europeans left in Delhi. The natives are fabricating all sorts of reports, as usual, to our disadvantage. The Brigadier has very wisely got a few hundred Europeans, infantry and artillery, from Meerut. We hear that Brigadier Showers had a battle with Tantia Topee at Ulwur, eighty miles from this, and that some rebels are endeavouring to gain possession of Bhurtpore. At eleven last night all the treasure from the Jhujur treasury was brought in, to secure it from the rebels, who threatened the place. This morning a letter from Meerut informs us that all the ladies have had to leave Bijnour, in consequence of Rohilcund being again disturbed.

LOYALTY REWARDED.—The Englishman has been informed that the Government has granted a handsome pension to the family of Tota Ram, who was hanged by the Gwalior rebels, along with his father and brother, for communicating secret intelligence to Government. The same journal announces that Government have presented Lutcheepersaud, of Jubbulpore, with a khilaut and sword, and a valuable estate at Googra, in consideration of the recipient's long and valuable services. Rajah Bahadoor Soorut Sing, of Saugor, has also received a valuable khilaut, and other rewards, for his good services to Government.

NON-MILITARY COMBATANTS.—The just rights of non-military persons who have borne arms against the mutineers are recognised in the following notification:—"Notification.—Allahabad, the 18th Jan., 1859.—The right hon. the Governor-General has much gratification in announcing, for general information, that her Majesty has been graciously pleased to determine that non-military persons who, during the progress of the present operations in India, have borne arms as volunteers against the mutineers, and have performed deeds of gallantry, shall be considered eligible to receive the high distinction of the Victoria Cross, under the same rules and regulations as are applicable to officers and men of her Majesty's army and navy and Indian army and navy, provided that it be established in each case that the person was serving for the time being under the orders of a general or other officer in command of troops in the field. R. J. H. BIRCH, Maj.-Gen., Sec. to Govt. of India, Mil. Depart., with the Gov.-Gen."

LUCKNOW, Jan. 10.—Ahmed Hoosein, the instructor to the pseudo king, applied through Darogah Wajid Ally, the protector of Mrs. Orr and Miss Jackson, for permission to return to Lucknow, requesting at the same time to be furnished with a perwannah. Through the same medium he was informed that he should first give himself up to Lord Clyde before anything else could be done. It is these Moulvies who deserve to expiate their crimes on the gallows, as by their preaching and lectures they not only stimulated, but they still encourage the rebels to oppose our cause. Would that all suffered the same fate as their brother the Fyzabad man. It is also reported that Mummoo Khan, the Begum's paramour, has likewise written in to Major Barrow, desiring an explanation of several points in Her Majesty's Proclamation, which he thinks are not sufficiently clear to be understood, concluding with the moderate request that military operations cease till the decision of the point. The natives yet believe that the Begum's reign will once again be restored in this province. Some Affghans purchasing wood could not come to terms with the seller, whom they beat, and on leaving the dealers said "Wait till the Begum's rule is again restored, and you will have what you deserve." One of the murderers of the Burkundaz, who assisted in the collection of arms, was hung at the village where the murder was committed. The effect produced may better be imagined than described. Indemnification to parties plundered by the rebels on account of their loyalty is, I believe, in contemplation. District officers have been called on to report on the merits of each individual case. The natives of the town are in a great state of excitement. Several of whom I have occasion to see have asked me what Government intend doing, for it is being proclaimed (say they) that we must leave our city within three months, or we will be slain. My utmost efforts to convince them to the contrary, or discover the foundation of the reports, have proved unavailing. It is, I dare say, the doing of some disaffected bigoted Mahomedan; but it behoves some one to see that the townspeople do not suffer from any such idle reports.—Hurkaru.

Jan. 11.—All organised rebellion has ceased, and the Budmashes are quietly returning home and resuming the pursuits of peace. Very many parties have lately surrendered; different Begums of Lucknow, and the Nawab of Furruckabad; this latter fellow swears the reports about him are utterly false; that he never had English females blown from guns, and that his only fault was to try and save them. He is being escorted to Cawnpore to be sent on to Furruckabad, where there will be a regular trial, and of course he will receive the reward of his crimes, if it be true that he acted so unmercifully to Mrs. Defontane and Miss Churcher. There is at present no appearance of the Nana, Begum, Mummoo Khan, &c., coming in. They have retired further into the interior, and have gone towards Baitool. The rebels have still a force of 10,000, and are strong enough to coerce the Nepal people. They have a safe passage in right of might. They have a full battery of artillery also with them. So that Sir Jung Bahadoor, &c., will have lots of opportunities to "flesh his maiden sword" if he is anxious to do so.—Lahore Chronicle.

Jan. 26.—After the ferment of the last two years Oude is becoming stagnant. News can only flow now in small streamlets. I suppose you have heard of General Walpole's fight in the Phillibheet district some fourteen days ago. Colonel Smyth, of the horse artillery, had been detached with a portion of the force to beat about for the enemy, and during his absence the general's outposts were attacked. They had enough to do to hold their own, but when Colonel Smyth's detachment returned a battle royal ensued. Our casualties appear to have been severe—Kemp of the Punjab infantry killed, Barwell hit in the arm, and two other officers, whose names I forget, killed or wounded. Nurput Sing, the Roohiya man, and his son, were both accounted for in the fight. "Al-hamdu-lillahi," said a native gentleman, on hearing of Nurput Sing's exit. At last General Walpole has avenged the repulse he sustained at the Roohiya fort last year. Amongst other worthies who are with the Begum, I do not think you have mentioned the Nazim Mohamed Hussain. His son and nephew surrendered, and are in Lucknow; but the Nazim himself could hardly hope for pardon. I am not aware that he committed murder, but he decidedly belongs to the classes excepted by the amnesty. As a leader who made war, not only in the territory of Oudh, but invaded and seized a province which had long been ours, he would, I should hope, find that "his fate was destined to a foreign strand." Another celebrity last night entertained the European and native gentry at a grand fête, which the Baboo, who wrote his invitations, modestly called "an evening party." Rajah Maun Sing was the host. The salons of Shah Behari Lall's capacious mansion were lit a giorno. Troops of nautch girls made the night hideous with their discordant melody. The great R—, the pillar of the state, was there in all his amplitude, and will perhaps devote a column to the fairy-like scene. Sir W. Mansfield surveyed the whole very calmly through the medium of spectacles, in a manner becoming a chief of the staff. The guests were all duly honoured with badges of some unknown foreign order, the host himself gracefully placing the collar round each recipient's neck. I think there must have been several classes. The amount of tinsel was certainly not the same in all. The illuminations were very pretty, and the fireworks decidedly good. The sparkle of champagne was, to say the least, agreeable, while the band of H. M.'s 23rd fusiliers beguiled our souls with the glorious music of Lucia di Lammermoir. Rajah Maun Sing is a slight spare man, hollow-chested, and not the stalwart warrior one would expect to see. His manners are quiet and pleasing. In conversation he shows considerable ability, and a remarkable acquaintance with most subjects. Mr. Montgomery, you are aware, is to leave soon. He will, I am sure, go regretted by all. Mr. Wingfield is to continue the task which the former has so worthily commenced.—Delhi Gazette.

GWALIOR, 22nd Jan.—The siege train at Seepree, which forms a part of the Gwalior division, has been ordered out to a fort not far from that place, where a party of our troops were recently molested. It appears that a detachment of the 71st highlanders were coming up to join the regiment, and losing their road, came to this fort, which was occupied by natives, whose allegiance was somewhat doubtful. On arriving there, as they were much in want of provisions, they requested admission for the purpose of procuring supplies, which was refused to them. A quarrel ensued, and the European soldiers flew to arms, but the combat terminated in the loss of seven of the highlanders, who were killed. How many of those in the fort were killed I am unable to say. The siege train, however, will pay them off, unless, as is generally the case, they make a bolt of it. Yesterday a Commissariat Sergeant, named Shaw, who was discharged from the 86th hospital in the fort, the same morning shot a sergeant of the 14th light dragoons, and wounded him severely. The man is living, but doubts are entertained regarding his recovery. The 14th sergeant is a married man, and has two children. It appears that the sergeant of the 14th saw Shaw before he left the fort hospital, with a loaded revolver, and advised him to unload it, or something to that effect. After some further parley, Shaw suddenly directed the pistol at the sergeant, saying he would shoot him, and so he did. It is generally spoken of as an accident, but I do not know how that can be made out.—Standard.

CAMP DHOOSAH, Jan. 15.—We (3rd Bengal Fusiliers) have now been out eleven days, one of which is a halt, the one on which I am writing. We are now about 200 miles from Agra. You know the plight in which we left Agra. We arrived at Futtpore Sekree the next morning, all wet and cold; slept in marble hall, without beds, grog, or food. Started early, and for the last five days have had no bed to lie on, in pursuit of Tantia Topee. Well, I despaired of seeing any other Topee except our own Topees, until yesterday, when, after a march of above 100 miles, the whole detachment being mounted on camels and elephants, we came up to him in this place. The enemy is reported to have been about 5,000 cavalry and 500 infantry. We were taking a wrong road, when a native came and told the brigadier that they were about two miles off, and did not expect us. A countermarch was ordered, and in less than half an hour we came upon them, and you may be sure we rendered a good account of them. The cavalry and our regiment commenced the engagement by a regular skirmish, killing at least 150 of the rascals. After the fight was nearly over, the artillery came up, and sent in shot and shells into the retiring foe with great precision. Tantia was in the field dressed in green silk, but as usual he bolted, some say he was wounded. One great rascal, a chief, I think his name is Mahomet Shumsabad, is killed. He had on an embroidered cloak, and was remarkably grand in his own tinpot way. We may be well proud of our regiment. I was in the rear, and could watch their whole movements. When formed in line, expecting the cavalry to charge, and the bullets whistling by them in every direction, they were as steady as if on parade. One man, Corporal Parker, was wounded in the arm.—Mofussilite.

GHAZEPUR, Jan. 24.—Letters from Brigadier Rowcroft's force speak of its approaching dispersion, the Madras troops wending their way homewards, whilst the 73rd proceed to take up a position at some village with an unpronounceable name on the Nepal frontier. The 13th is to go to Goruckpore, whilst Bustee is to be abandoned, and will become a second edition of the "Deserted Village" without a Goldsmith. The Commissariat department is busily engaged at Sasseram equipping the 77th. The head quarters of the 2nd battalion of the 60th rifles have not yet marched from Buxar, though they said they would. It is probable, however, they shortly will. The wing of the 29th is expected at Sasseram. The re-appearance of some insurgents in the vicinity of the Grand Trunk Road may cause some delay in carrying out the arrangements previously made for the disposal of the troops now in the Shahabad and Ghazepore districts, but the delay can only be temporary, as the day has gone by when any real necessity for an appeal for aid to military authority could be said to exist; the police may be safely left to extinguish the dying embers of rebellion, which are only kept alive by the exclusive clauses of the amnesty. The General, we hear, is to retrace his steps to Dinapore, which has been reinaugurated as the head quarters of the division, vice Benares disrated. The first Madras Fusiliers are proceeding downwards to Calcutta by bullock train from Allahabad. In fact, troops are moving in all directions to their hot weather quarters, the campaign on this side being looked on as completely over. The camel corps are by this time at Agra, at least they were hurrying on there the other day to assist in Tantia Topee's annihilation.—Englishman.

BRIGADIER SHOWERS' COLUMN.—On the 11th Jan., when Brigadier Showers arrived at Malarna, the rebels had moved up from Inderghur towards Bhugwuntgurh. He therefore sent forward a part of his force to Peepulwara, and followed himself during the night. The rebels, however, passed before he reached. Brigadier Showers now followed with the cavalry and 100 infantry to a place called Jullae, and, on arriving there, learnt that the rebels had proceeded on to Chatsoo, to which place, after a bivouac of three hours, he proceeded. The column halted at Chatsoo at noon to refresh men and horses, when the order was given to march, and they proceeded in the direction of Tonga, under the impression that it was by this route the rebels had gone. Upon reaching Lowan or Lohan at 9 p. m., they halted to get chapatties made for the men and a dram issued,—they had been without cooked food for two days. An advance was then made to Dewsa, distance ten miles. A road was found outside leading close to the enemy's camp; a glance at their position sufficed to show to the brigadier the course of action; the cavalry were formed up on an eminence, and the word to "charge" given. Down they swept, crossed two intervening fields, and came upon the enemy, who were taken completely by surprise. The officers commanding the cavalry, Lieutenants Chapman and Oldfield, drove all before them. The rebels divided into three parties, one fled to the right, one to the left, and one to the front. A few shots were fired by the artillery into the fugitives who went off to the right. Those on the left speedily disappeared, but the pursuit was kept up for five miles. The victory was most decisive: one chief was killed, but it is not ascertained as yet who he was: the enemy lost about 300 killed, all their elephants and camels, several horses and ponies, and about 300 muskets and tulwars. Our column had marched ninety-nine miles in three days, and for the two days preceding the encounter both men and horses remained in their accoutrements. The brigadier recommenced the pursuit the following day, but on falling in with Brigadier Honner's brigade left the work to him, and returned towards Agra. Altogether this affair has been one of the most successful that has taken place of late. The enemy have at last learnt that they cannot any longer trust to speedy marching, or constant change of direction to ensure their safety. The whole band is thoroughly disorganised, and Brigadier Showers' raid will go a great way towards putting a stop to the desultory Pindaree warfare that bid fair at one time to keep Central India in a state of ferment and agitation, and was beginning to look serious. Too much praise cannot be given to the officers and troops that left this with Brigadier Showers; we have already spoken of their bravery and endurance.—Delhi Gazette.

CAWNPUR.—The court of request book in this station was religiously preserved by the bazaar people, and officers who were murdered here have had their debts as recorded in this book paid out of their estates. Bakur Alli (chief adviser of the villain the Nana, and murderer of our people at the entrenchment and ghat), was tried some time ago, and condemned to death; he suddenly became unwell, and is so still, being attended by the medical officer who acted as self-made lawyer in defending the Nuna Nawab, brother of Bakur Ally. The two zemindars who intercepted our people escaping from Futtehgurh, and murdered them or caused them to be so, were tried, convicted, and condemned to death. One was hung, the other kept out of the way until the matter was forgotten, when he was quietly released. The natives in these parts who have stood by us say there is sure to be another rebellion, when they will be the first to be murdered.

FEROZEPUR, 24th Jan.—Tantia Topee and his prognosticated appearance among us has created some sensation; at least 300 men of the 24th, and half a battery of artillery, are in readiness to move at a moment's notice, and have been so since Friday last. On Thursday the usual salute of guns announced the arrival of the officer commanding the division. On Friday morning, at an early hour, a line parade was formed on the ground adjacent to the infantry lines. Of late some little stir had been made relative to definite orders having been received for the immediate construction of new barracks; but fortunately the whole burlesque has ended. It is now settled: that there is positively no site suitable for such buildings, and it is therefore unanimously decided that the long required barracks are to be erected at some other station, the model drainage line has flooded so many here of late, that its real utility has only now dawned; the trap to catch Tantia Topee and his followers. General Windham has left en route to Mooltan, Major Wodehouse, of H. M.'s 24th, accompanied the General. Major Chamberlain has arrived, and at once takes command of the Ferozepore force, about to proceed towards Sirsa.—Lahore Chronicle.

TAJ MAHAL.—We are happy to inform our readers that the Taj has just undergone a shaving process, recommended some years ago by a traveller indignant at the sprouting signs of maturity the buildings exhibited. The absence of a leafy crop gives an air of refreshing juvenility to the hoary pile.

COLONEL SHULDHAM.—It is rumoured that the command of the 6th European Regiment will be offered to Colonel Shuldham, now commanding at Allyghur.

REWARRE, Jan. 17.—The column from Delhi, consisting of 500 European infantry of H.M.'s 61st foot, and second Bengal fusiliers, three guns, Tamb's troop, and 250 sabres, 4th Sikh cavalry, commanded by Major Redmond, of H.M.'s 61st, arrived here at sunset last evening, after a long march of twenty-four miles over a very sandy road. A few days previously 300 Towanna cavalry, and three police resallahs, under command of Lieutenant Orchard, were ordered here by Mr. Ford, the collector of Goorgaon, and the collector himself came here on the evening of the 15th inst. The left wing of the 23rd Punjab infantry (raised by General Van Cortlandt, and with which he subdued the rebels of Bhuttiana and Harriana) came in to-day from Kanoud. Therebels, 6,000 strong, well armed, and all well mounted, have arrived at Ulwur. The leaders are, Feroze Shah, Tania Topee, the Rao Saheb, his brother, and Walleed Khan, of Mallaghur. Feroze Shah has issued a proclamation, which has been posted on the gates of Ulwur, setting forth his lineage and titles as the descendant of the house of Timour and king of Hindostan, and calling on the Ulwur troops to turn out the political agent, Captain Impey, and to make over the Raj to him. Captain Impey and his poor lady (the daughter of a Lawrence) must be in a sad fix. They have nothing to fear if the Ulwur troops are staunch, but this is hardly to be expected from troops that are so much in arrears as they are. There are twenty lakhs of hard cash in the young rajah's exchequer, and a lot of very nice guns in his fort. The Jeypore troops placed at Kote Pootlee to watch the movements of the rebels bolted adus bolus to no one knows where; perhaps they have joined the rebels. If you will just glance at a map, you will perceive that these rebels have a splendid field westward. There is Shekawatee, Bikanair, Bhawalpore, Palee, Jesulmeer, Joudpore, &c., where they can repair to, and lead our poor fellows a pretty dance. Could a greater farce be perpetrated than sending out a column, constituted as the Delhi one is, after such nimble rebels as those now at Ulwur? They have eluded the columns of Napier, Smith, and Showers, and as for the Delhi one, upon the principle of Mrs. Glass's receipt, "when they'll catch their hare they'll skin it, of course." If a force could be got together at Ferozepore and sent to Sirsa, it would stand a fair chance of intercepting the rebels towards Bikanair.—Lahore Chronicle.

MILITARY STATIONS.—The following movements in the regiment of artillery are to take place shortly:—E. troop royal horse artillery, from Grant's force to Seetapore; F. D. troop, from head quarters camp to Meerut. Royal Foot Artillery.—5th comp. 3rd batt., from Ukberpore to Fyzabad; 3rd comp. 8th batt., from Lucknow to England; 6th comp. 11th batt., from Seetapore to Benares; 5th comp. 12th batt., from Grant's force to Goruckpore; 5th comp. 13th batt., en route to Lucknow; 6th comp. 13th batt., from Brigadier Purnell's force to Lucknow; 3rd comp. 14th batt., from Grant's force to Allahabad; 4th comp. 14th batt., remains at Roy Bareilly; 7th comp. 14th batt., from Seetapore brigade to Futteghur. Bengal Horse Artillery.—1st troop 1st brig., from Gonda to Lucknow; 2nd troop 1st brig., remains at Meerut; 3rd troop 1st brig., remains at Trans-Gogra; 5th troop 1st brig., remains at Philibheet; 2nd troop 2nd brig., from Grant's force to Allahabad; 2nd troop 3rd brig., from Lucknow to Umballa; 3rd troop 3rd brig., from Seetapore to Muttra.

A SANSKRIT ODE.—Raja Kally Krissen Bahadur has written an ode to her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, on her assumption of the Government of India. Being in Sanskrit, we regret we are not competent to offer any opinion on its merits as a literary composition. The writer having informed his benighted readers that "Sanskrit is a language understood by learned Hindoos throughout India," adds, that "translations can with the greatest ease be made from that language into Bengali, Hindui, (sic) Guzeratee, and Mahrattée, which," he announces, "are merely dialects of Sanskrit."

THE DELHI PRINCES.—A curious circumstance occurred in Cawnpore the other day. Two of the blood royal princes of Delhi have, it seems, been for a considerable time, or rather since the outbreak of the mutiny, living at Cawnpore as fakirs, on the alms of the charitably disposed, without exciting any suspicion of their royal lineage. These two Shahzads on the publication of the amnesty proclamation went to the collector of Cawnpore, confessed who they were, and demanded the benefit of the amnesty. Of course the authority was startled at the appearance before him of two princes of whose existence the slightest suspicion did not exist. Full particulars of the case were sent to Lord Canning, who immediately guaranteed the Shahzads pardon, and with it a suitable pension to each. You may guess the astonishment of these fellows at obtaining so handsome and unexpected a decision in their favour. The particulars of this story I have had from the most reliable authority; still you must receive it from me as second hand.—Hurkaru.

THE INDIAN BAGPIPE.—Our Caledonian friends will be disgusted or gratified at the following ingenious imitation of their national musical instrument. A bheesty was seen, the other evening, parading the streets of Boileau Gunge, to the intense delight of an admiring bazaar audience, with an inflated mushuk under his right arm, and a pipe (banslee attached to the mouth), while he played his own national airs, and a faint parody on "The Campbells are coming." The man had probably been lately attached to a highland regiment, from whom he had picked up the idea. His imitation of the consequential strut of his highland confrere was perfect.—Mofussilite.

BRIGADIER COLIN TROUP, it is said, goes to Mooltan, and Brigadier Farquharson either to Umballa or on sick leave.

THE JUMMOO CONSPIRACY.—A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, writing from Umritsur, observes:—"I notice the following in your paragraph about the Jummoo conspiracy. 'Our ally, Juwahir Singh, the Maharajah's cousin, son of Dhyani Singh, is said to have the credit of it all. You hope it may be an exaggeration.' Not only is it an exaggeration, but altogether a fiction, as far as Rajah Juwahur Singh is concerned. Owing to the good and just offices of Sir John Lawrence, Maharajah Runbeer Singh has agreed to restore his jagheer of three and a half lakhs to his cousin, and to receive him as a relation should be received. Dewan Joala Sahaie is coming shortly to Lahore, to escort Juwahur Singh to Jummoo, and to place his property confiscated by Goolab Singh, amounting to eighteen lakhs of rupees, at his absolute disposal. The only difference between the new arrangement and the status ante quo is, that Rajah Juwahur Singh is to place one lakh of rupees annually at the disposal of his brother Raja Motes Singh. You may, I think, fully rely on this information. The recent conspiracy originated entirely with Meean Huttoo Singh, a low debauchee, whom his brother has treated but too well. The whole subject of Kashmir politics must shortly undergo revision, and it is to be hoped that reform will be the order of the day."

FINES have been levied on several towns for the repair or reconstruction of buildings damaged or destroyed in the mutiny. Shahjehanpore was charged with two lakhs, but the governor-general reduced it to Co.'s Rs. 12,000, on the ground that the royal amnesty barred the levy of fines for the compensation of private losses, but that public buildings must be restored according to valuation given by the executive engineer. Jaunpore is assessed at Co.'s Rs. 28,000, and Bareilly at Co.'s Rs. 25,000. If the whole amount is not expended, it is to be kept separate.

THE CALCUTTA VOLUNTEERS.—The Calcutta merchants, bankers, and other residents have memorialised Lord Canning to retain permanently the Calcutta volunteers, as a defensible regiment for Calcutta and its environs.

MR. W. RITCHIE, Advocate General in Bengal, has been appointed Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University.

OFFICIAL CHANGES.—Mr. Lushington, Financial Secretary, proceeds to England on full furlough, Mr. Drummond officiating for him. If the rules for the department of account are adhered to, the Madras accountant will officiate as accountant-general to the Government of India, the Bombay accountant must proceed to Madras, being succeeded by the Bengal accountant, for whom the accountant in N. W. Provinces will officiate, and the first assistant to the accountant-general must prepare for a visit to the N. W. It is likewise stated that Mr. G. C. Barnes, commissioner and superintendent of the Cis-Sutlej States, leaves Umballa immediately to join his appointment as secretary to the supreme Government. In consequence of this move, Mr. Taylor, now commissioner of the Trans, becomes commissioner of the Cis-Sutlej States, making room for Major R. Taylor, deputy-commissioner of the Kangra district, who will be succeeded by Mr. R. Jenkins from Kurnaul, this last place being filled up by the transfer of Mr. C. P. Elliott, officiating deputy-commissioner of Jung.

CASHMERE.—A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette errs when he states that, in consequence of the good offices of the chief commissioner, the jagheers belonging to Rajah Jowahur Singh are to be restored to him; or that the treasure, hitherto in the hands of the Cashmere chief, is to find its way to the coffers of the lawful claimant. So far from this being the case, the Dewan of the Maharajah, named Joalla Sahaie, escorts the family of Rajah Jowahur Singh out of Jummoo to Lahore, and it is whispered that the latter will be obliged to leave the Punjab altogether. We trust this latter report is not correct. Considering how expert natives are in trumping up false and malicious charges against those who are all but helpless, it is to be hoped that the authorities will sift the evidence against Rajah Jowahur Singh before deciding on the extent of his complicity in the late conspiracy at Jummoo.—Lahore Chronicle.

MONUMENT TO THE DELHI VICTIMS.—A meeting was held at Delhi, on the 10th January, for the purpose of taking into consideration the erection of a monument to the memory of those who were murdered in May 1857, on the breaking out of the mutiny; present: the Rev. H. Woodington, assistant chaplain officiating at Delhi in the chair; P. H. Egerton, Esq., C.S., J. C. Murphy, Esq., J. C. Parry, Esq., and G. Wagentreiber, Esq. I. Proposed by P. H. Egerton, Esq., "That a plain and handsome monument should be erected in the Delhi churchyard over those remains of the victims of the massacre of May 1857, which have been recovered and there interred." Seconded by J. C. Parry, Esq., and agreed to by the meeting. II. Proposed by G. Wagentreiber, Esq., "That a paper be circulated in this station, for the purpose of raising subscriptions, and that editors of papers be requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting, with a view to give all interested in the project an opportunity of joining in carrying it out." Seconded by J. C. Murphy, Esq., and agreed to by the meeting. III. Proposed by Mr. Murphy, "That Mr. Egerton be requested to carry out the object of this meeting, and Mr. Parry, manager of the Delhi Bank, to receive all subscriptions for that purpose." Seconded by Mr. Wagentreiber and agreed to by the meeting. Mr. Egerton kindly consented to act as secretary, and Mr. Parry as treasurer. The secretary having furnished the meeting with a list of the names of the following persons—G. Beresford, manager, D.B., Mrs. Beresford and two children; Rev. A. Hubbard, C.M.; Mr. H. F. B. Churcher, D.B.; and Mr. Sandys, teacher, M.S., whose remains have been identified and placed in the vaults, it was unanimously resolved to include their names in the inscription on the monument. The thanks of the meeting having been given to the Chair, the meeting dissolved. The following sums were subscribed at the meeting:—P. H. Egerton, Esq., Rs. 100; J. C. Murphy, Esq., Rs. 40; J. C. Parry, Esq., Rs. 50; G. Wagentreiber, Esq., Rs. 25; and Rev. H. Woodington, Rs. 25. Subscribed in Agra: Proprietors of the Delhi Gazette, Rs. 100.

HAZAREBAUGH, 24th Jan.—After Darjeeling I consider Hazarebaugh as the best place that I have visited. It is situated on rising ground, and small hillocks are visible at a distance. The place is about eighty miles distant from Gya. It is healthy, and is joined to the Grand Trunk Road. There are about 200 men of the 6th regiment encamped here, 900 recruits are daily expected. The station is entirely military; barracks are being built, of which twenty are finished, each building to accommodate 150 men. There is a protestant church, but no catholic chapel, the one we had having been pulled down some six years ago. I am glad, however, to add that Government has decided upon rebuilding it, and the work, I am told, will commence immediately.

ORDINATION SERVICES.—At the first ordination services of the Lord Bishop of Calcutta on the 25th January, among the deacons ordained were three natives, David Mohan, David Solomon, from the Church Mission at Benares, and Tulsi Paul, from the Meerut Mission. As Paul is not acquainted with the English language, the oath of supremacy was translated into Urdu by the Rev. Professor Slater, examining chaplain to the bishop; and the subsequent examination of this candidate was in the same language. Considering that the bishop had not been three months in the country, his lordship, according to the Harkara, read Urdu with surprising accuracy. The Rev. Tulsi Paul is to take charge of a native congregation at Deyrah Dhoon, where a colony of native Christians is forming. David Mohan is appointed to the pastorage of a native congregation at Allahabad, and David Solomon to another at Chunar. It is said that this was the first time that three natives had been ordained together, and these may be regarded as the first fruits to the ministry from the north-western provinces. Believing that only one convert had hitherto been admitted to holy orders from the upper provinces, Abdul Musseeh, who first received Lutheran ordination, and afterwards episcopal orders from Bishop Haber, the Harkara re-publishes the following account of that ceremony, which was prepared in December, 1825:—"The ordination ceremony was, in every point of view, solemn and affecting. The bishop read the service for Abdul Musseeh, who did not understand English, in Hindostanee, with great fluency; and there were present near twenty clergymen, all kneeling around the altar, and assisting in the holy act. Father Abraham, the Arminian suffragan from the patriarch of Jerusalem, with the Arminian vicar of Calcutta, was present, dressed in the black robes of his convent; he sat at the bishop's right hand during prayers, entered with him the communion-rails, and laid his hand with his on the heads of the candidates. After the ceremony was concluded, they embraced at the door of the church."

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE 7TH N.L.—The Madras Spectator has heard that there has been some trouble at Secunderabad, occasioned by the behaviour of certain soldiers in the 7th native infantry. A strong feeling exhibited itself in the regiment against marching to Saugor, unless some increase of pay was granted, and one man having been placed under arrest for disrespectful conduct, an entire company went down to the guard in a body, and put itself under confinement until the man should be released. The Commander in Chief was fortunately at Secunderabad at the time, and five or six of the ringleaders were tried by court martial, flogged, and dismissed on the spot. We are sorry to hear that the officer commanding the regiment has fallen under the displeasure of the Commander in Chief.

THE ROHILLAS.—Our Aurangabad correspondent informs us that two more villages, Coopta and Dygaum, have been plundered by Rohillas. Ajunta was also plundered and burnt, the Nizam's treasury forming part of the booty. The peons in charge of the latter offered some resistance, but were overpowered, two of them being killed and eight or ten wounded. A native's guard of the Hyderabad contingent gallantly protected Major Gill's house at Ajunta from the common destruction, thus saving a very valuable collection of pictures, the labour of years. These Rohillas sent a threatening letter to the Soobah of Aurangabad, informing him of their intention to plunder the richest of the Nizam's villages around Aurangabad, and challenging him, if he were a man, to come out with his troops and meet them. It is said that they also declared that it was not their intention to touch any part of the Deccan where British authority prevailed, as they were not the enemies of the British but of the Nizam. It is generally rumoured that these Rohillah dacoites are instigated by influential parties at Hyderabad, with a view, if possible, to damage our staunch friend and ally the Minister Nawab Salar Jung, if not with the English, at least with his own sovereign. The plunder obtained at Anwur is reported as having been immense, and is estimated at the almost incredible sum of twenty-five lacs! In two houses twenty-five pots of gold and silver coins formed part of the booty; the women, too, were ill-treated as usual, and some of the younger ones carried off. Bouldana, in which there is a large treasury, protected by a mere handful of troops, was at one time threatened, but the precautionary measures, including a stockade thrown up round the treasury, adopted by the Commissioner, Captain Bushby, averted the impending danger.—Madras Spectator.

TOORA BAZ KHAN.—The pursuit after Toora Baz Khan, the Rohilla Jamadar, whose escape from prison was recently announced, has been successful. A reward of Rs. 5,000 was offered for his apprehension, and a party of sowars, sent out by Salar Jung, were fortunate enough to kill him, and bring his body to Hyderabad on the 24th of January, together with that of one of his Arab followers. The destruction of this Rohilla chief, he before was able to do further mischief, must be regarded as peculiarly fortunate at the present juncture, when the men of his tribe are giving so much trouble in other parts of the Nizam's country.

THREE MONTHS' BATTAL. we learn from the Englishman, has been given to the company of H.M.'s rangers and the detachments of the 1st and 3rd regiments of cavalry, and 2nd and 6th regiments of infantry, of the Hyderabad contingent, who were engaged under Captain Davies in suppressing the late Bheel insurrection on the Ahmednuggur and Candeish frontier. This has been sanctioned as a special grant, in no way to be construed into a precedent for the future.

GOVERNMENT LIBERALITY.—The following story, which has reached the Madras Spectator, is beautifully illustrative of the economy of the authorities in the matter of secret service. The failure of our general officers in following up Tantia Topee is too well known to require notice; and is to be generally ascribed to the exorbitant sums paid by the rebel leader to his spies for any information respecting our movements. The other day a high-caste native, after unheard-of dangers and hairbreadth escapes, contrived to bring information from Tantia Topee's own camp to the general officer commanding one of the pursuing columns, and for his boldness, fidelity, and consummate skill was rewarded by the large sum of one rupee!

OOTACAMUND LAWRENCE ASYLUM.—We (Madras Times) are happy in being able to inform those interested in the Ootacamund Lawrence Asylum that the property called Stonehouse has been purchased for the institution. The committee have acted very wisely in securing that house and its extensive grounds—about fifty acres, we believe—for their present purpose. We hope hereafter to see a noble building arise in the neighbourhood of Ootacamund for this great and national object. Meanwhile Stonehouse is the best place upon the hills for a school, and will answer admirably for the next three or four years; whilst it is capable also of being enlarged and adapted for the permanent use of the asylum, should funds be wanting for the erection of better premises.

SERIOUS RIOT AT NAGERCOIL.—We have received intelligence from a private source of a serious riot at Nagercoil. We are not yet in possession of full particulars, but as far as our information goes, the affair appears to have originated from the arrogant assertion of caste privileges on the part of the nairs or higher class, over the poor shanars or toddy drawers, who answer to the chogars of this place, and the thiers of Calicut. In early times, when exclusiveness and caste prejudices were at their height in Travancore, and the man who had the misfortune to be of low birth was scarcely recognised in the scale of human beings, it was regarded as a serious offence for females of the Shanar caste to appear in public with any covering above the waist. The practice, however, has been gradually falling into desuetude. The moralising influence of Christianity awakened these miserable people to a sense of the decencies of life—and all who came under the spiritual direction of the missionaries were led to assume an attire more consistent with feminine modesty. This state of things had continued some time, when a party of the higher class began to look with jealousy upon the becoming change, which they viewed as an invasion of their own exclusive privilege. We are astonished that the Dewan of Travancore, from whose liberal education and enlightened views we had hoped for better things, should for a moment have given the slightest encouragement to this morbid feeling; for we learn with unfeigned regret that he issued orders for reviving the obsolete and disgusting practice, and compelling Christian wives and mothers to expose their nudity to the gaze of the public. The missionaries very properly resisted the order, and refused to allow their congregation to submit to an observance so repugnant to all decency; and we presume a riot ensued between the sticklers for exclusive privileges and the unfortunate victims of an odious tyranny. The results, we hear, have been very disastrous. The resident's bungalow and protestant church were burnt down, and the houses of the missionaries, Messrs. Russell and Baylis, injured by the nairs. All connected with the mission were obliged to proceed to Trivandrum to seek protection, where the missionaries held a meeting at General Cullen's, after which they returned to Nagercoil in company with the Dewan, and a party of the Nair brigade, under the command of Captain Daly, which was sent to quell the disturbance. So great was the feeling, that we hear it was not thought safe for General Cullen to leave Trivandrum.

HYDRABAD MEDICAL SCHOOL.—We are glad to serve the progress of European medical art in the Nizam's dominion. The medical school at Hyderabad, conducted by Dr. Smith, under the fostering influence of the Resident and Salar Jung, is flourishing. At a recent examination of the school, Drs. Macpherson and Cole were quite astonished at the amount of knowledge which the pupils displayed in anatomy, physiology, pathology, midwifery, &c. It must be remembered that Dr. Smith's instruction was by means of lectures in the Persian language without the necessary text books.

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS, Jan. 31.—Brigadier Roberts is at Baloor with a squadron of cavalry; half a troop of Madras horse artillery, under Captain Molesworth, and some European infantry, besides a few 9th M.N.I. Brigadier Hill is at Chartanah, a few coss off, and Captain Grant, with a detachment of 1st cavalry Hyderabad contingent is at Peepulgaum, and, also commanding a force under the Soabah of Arungabad, consisting of 200 cavalry and 150 infantry, mostly Arabs and Rohillas. Hugh Rose has returned to Poonah. The Rohillas have been reported as having all dispersed, and it is hoped now that the forces in the Dekkan will soon be ordered into cantonments, as the weather is becoming warm in tents.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EFFECTS OF INTOXICATION.—A fireman of the P. and O. Company's steam vessel Malabar, who had been ashore on what Jack usually terms a "spree," went on board in such a complete state of inebriety on Sunday the 30th Jan., that he rolled off the top-gallant fore-castle, and fell into the water, and though every exertion was used by the officer and watch on deck, no trace whatever was found of the ill-fated man.

MEDALS and gratuities for long service and good conduct have been bestowed as follows:—On Sergeant Major Russell, 2nd European regiment L. I., a silver medal and a gratuity of £15 on discharge. On privates Ward and Reilly, 1st European regiment (fusiliers), each a silver medal and a gratuity equivalent to £5.

REWARD OF MERIT.—We are given to understand that the Bombay Government has made a handsome present, in the form of a pecuniary donation, to Mr. R. J. Bolton, for his zeal and care while in medical charge of the cavalry horses from the Cape of Good Hope to this port. This gentleman was likewise most favourably noticed by the British Government for his care and attention to the horses during the Crimean campaign.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS.—Government has sanctioned the appointment of Mr. Wilcox to the office of Surveyor to the Municipal Commissioners, but has decided that his monthly salary should not exceed the sum of Rs. 600. The Commissioners, who had proposed a higher salary, have urged upon Government to reconsider its decision, and sanction the original sum proposed. Government has sanctioned the increased salary of Rs. 400 to Mr. Hutchinson, proposed by the Commissioners.

A CHARITABLE DONATION.—We learn that on the occasion of the death of the wife of the rich Parsee merchant, Dhunjeebhoy Framjee, brother-in-law to the Parsee baronet, her husband and relations, according to the usage of the Parsees, subscribed a sum of Rs. 14,475, to be applied to charitable purposes in memory of the deceased lady. Of this sum Rs. 10,000 are to be invested in the five per cent. Government loan, the interest whereof is made payable to Mr. Bhimjee Jeevunjee, the celebrated Parsee bone-setter, to enable him to afford gratuitous assistance of his art to the poor.

NATIVE LIBERALITY.—As an illustration of native liberality in the cause of education, a correspondent informs us that Shet Muggunbhai Kurumchund and Shetanee Hurcooverbae have promised to give Rs. 15,000 for the establishment of a Sanscrit school at Ahmedabad.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARIES.—The English Wesleyans have resolved to appoint missionaries to the army in India. For the present their view is limited to the appointment of three army missionaries, namely, one to Madras, one to Bombay, and one to Bengal. One of these, the Rev. B. Broadley, intended for the Bombay army, arrived in Bombay on the 30th January, per ship Sea Queen, from Glasgow 16th October.

HARBOUR MISSION.—The Rev. Thomas Rosie, who has been engaged by the Bombay Harbour Mission Union, commenced his sacred duties on Sunday the 30th Jan., by preaching on board the hulk of the late Dr. Ely, which has been converted by the Overland Mail on the 26th Jan., comes into a "Mariner's Church." Mr. Rosie, who amongst us accredits by the highest testimonials from persons well qualified to pronounce an opinion on his fitness for the laborious duties he has undertaken. We venture to bespeak for him a warm reception from all well-wishers to the interesting class whose spiritual benefit his labours are intended to promote.

CASUALTIES.—We regret being obliged to record the death of Lieutenant Henry Grice, of the Bombay Invalid Establishment, an event which took place at Dapoolie on the 21st Jan. The body of the deceased officer was found in a well in his compound, into which he is supposed to have fallen. There was an inquest held on the body, but no evidence was elicited about the circumstances that attended the casualty. The remains were carried to the grave on the 22nd in the usual way, a subaltern's firing party from the veteran battalion, and a carrying party of twelve privates, attending the funeral. The deceased officer was thirty-nine years of age, and was invalided in January, 1852. He entered the army in 1842, and obtained his lieutenancy in April, 1845. We also regret to announce the death of Lieutenant Thomas Watt, of the 18th (Royal Irish) regiment of foot, adjutant of the Queen's depot at Colaba, which melancholy event occurred on the 30th Jan. at Colaba, after a short illness. The deceased officer was taken ill about noon, and expired in an hour and a half afterwards. A post-mortem examination was held on the body, to ascertain the cause of death, but the result of the inquiry has not transpired. The late Lieutenant Watt entered the army as ensign on the 25th September, 1857, and was promoted to lieutenant on the 10th September, 1858.

NASSICK.—Bhagojee (the Bheel naine who killed Captain Henry), and his followers have made their appearance again, and have burned and plundered some villages in these districts. The superintendents of police and their men are after them. It was a prudent measure on the part of Government keeping at the large treasury towers in the districts the few regular troops they have there, for of late there have been several gang robberies in those parts.

HOLKAR'S BEREAVEMENT.—Intelligence has been received in Bombay of the death of the twin-sons of his highness the Maharajah Holkar of Indore. The two deceased were the only sons of his highness, aged four months. The melancholy events, which occurred respectively on the 10th and 21st Jan., have caused general mourning in the city.

DEATH FROM THE STING OF A SERPENT.—Last Sunday evening, February 6th, the wife of Mr. Pratt, uncovenanted assistant in the general department of the secretariat, died from the effects of the sting of a serpent. It appears that she was walking along with her husband in the fields adjoining her residence at Mahim, when she happened to tread upon a serpent that was crouching under the grass, and received a sting in the foot, from the effects of which she died in about two hours afterwards.

THE LATE MILITARY TRAGEDY AT POONA.—The inquiry into the late fatal affray on the night of the 1st Jan. in the lines of the 86th depot, between the royal artillery and H. M.'s 86th regiment, has entirely failed to fix the criminality involved in the killing outright of one man of the royal artillery, and the wounding of several others, upon any of the parties concerned in the outrage.

THE PUNJAB RAILWAY.—It appears that some apprehension is felt by the shareholders in the Punjab railway that a further call is about to be made. We are authorised to state that no intention exists of making a call before the middle of the ensuing year, the company having ample funds in hand to provide for the expenses of the next six months.

DR. ROBERT MILLAR, 16th N.I.—The Poona Observer says:—"We understand that a medical committee, ordered by Government to inquire into the state of health of Dr. R. Millar, of the Bombay Medical Establishment, having reported the unfortunate gentleman to be of unsound mind, it has been decided that he is not now to be tried by a court martial on the charge preferred against him by order of the Commander-in-Chief." This unfortunate gentleman has been liberated from custody on giving securities to keep the peace towards Mr. Berkeley, who generously declined to press the charge against his assailant.

REV. MR. HEBICH.—It is said that the well-known missionary at Cannanore, Rev. Mr. Hebich, has been authorized to leave the Malabar coast for a season to visit Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and other parts of India. He has the peculiarity and self-denial of being a man of one book, the Bible, never reading anything else, and gathering knowledge of current events from conversation only.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Feb. 8).—Cotton Piece Goods.—The import market has undergone a change, and the activity among the dealers has diminished during the fortnight. Grey Shirtings have suffered in prices, as also Grey Madapollams and Grey T. Cloths; and Grey Domestic are dull of sale.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Feb. 8).—Cotton.—The market is dull, and prices have considerably declined. Oil Seeds.—Teel seed alone has been in fair request, at former prices. The other descriptions of seeds have declined, particularly Linseed.

LABUAN.—The establishment of trade with Labuan seems to have given great satisfaction to the mass of the inhabitants of the countries and rivers from Sarawak to Sulu and Balungun, although looked upon with jealousy by the Government of Brunei. The number of trading Bornean prahs which entered the harbour in 1856 was 467, at 800 tons, making, with the British and other vessels (numbering 41), a total tonnage of 13,166 tons. The exports had risen in value to £20,080, the bulk of which was sent to Singapore, the remainder to Hong Kong. These exports consisted chiefly of sago, £3,170; coals, £4,796; specie, £1,563; birds' nests, £1,105; pepper, £887; beeswax, £818; camphor, gutta-percha, trepang, pearls, and sundries. The imports still exceed the exports, those of 1856 being valued at about £34,000, of which £13,238 was cotton goods, and £6,409 specie. The coal company has had to contend with serious difficulties in getting rid of the water in their slants, and this has told upon the revenue from the decrease in the royalty received. In 1854, 6,805 tons were sold at the mines; in 1855, 1,394 tons; and in 1856, 5,589 tons. Although the production of coal in the market has been delayed by these adverse circumstances, there is no doubt of its good quality, and that it can be supplied to a considerable extent, and may be increased to any amount, relieving our mines at home from a supply that is afforded at a very great waste and enhanced expense. The extension of steam communication in the Eastern Archipelago and the China seas will give an enhanced value to the coal of Labuan.

Court Martial.

LIEUT. WILLIAM CLYDE GOLDIE, H.M.'s 12TH ROYAL REGT. LANCERS.

Adjt. Gen's Office, H.M.'s Forces,
Calcutta, Jan. 25, 1859.

Adjt. Gen's Office, Allahabad, Jan. 21.—At a genl. court martial assembled at Allahabad, Dec. 24, 1858, Lieut. W. C. Goldie, H.M.'s 12th royal regt. of Lancers, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, when in command of a detachmt. of recruits, proceeding by bullock train, been drunk on the road, from Sydahad to Allahabad, on or about the night of the 14th, or the morning of Nov. 15, 1858.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be dismissed fr. H.M.'s serv.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) CLYDE, Gen. Commander-in-Chief.

Camp, Rankie, Jan. 8, 1859.

Remarks by his lordship the Commander in Chief in India. The Court committed a great irregularity in asking for the production of former convictions against the prisoner, such a course being only admissible in the case of non-commissioned officers and private soldiers.

Lieutenant Goldie will be struck off the strength of H.M.'s 12th lancers from the date on which this order may be communicated to him at Allahabad, which will be reported by Brig. Wood, C.B., to the Adjt. Gen. H.M.'s Forces, and the Military Secretary to his excellency the Commander in Chief.

By order of his excellency the Commander in Chief.

W. L. PAKENHAM, Colonel,
Adjutant General H. M.'s Forces in India.

Trials by Court Martial.

The C. in C. having had before him for review the proceedings of several general courts martial, held under Act No. VIII. of 1857, before which large bodies of prisoners were brought for trial at one and the same time, His Excellency considers it expedient to offer a few remarks upon the subject, for the particular consideration of officers authorised to hold such courts.

In Lord Clyde's opinion, the measure above adverted to is not one well calculated to secure the deliberate administration of justice, or to lead to that dispassionate inquiry into each prisoner's case which, however culpable he may have been, he is entitled to expect when placed upon his trial before a military tribunal.

His lordship does not, however, consider it advisable to issue any definite instructions that would limit the number of prisoners to be ordinarily tried together under Act No. VIII. of 1857, as the effect of such a course might be to inconveniently interfere with the discretion which should remain in the hands of officers who find it necessary to convene courts-martial under that Act; but he would earnestly impress upon all officers empowered to carry out the intentions of the legislature, the necessity that exists of carefully considering the ends of justice on all occasions of trial, and the right of the accused to a fair and unimpeachable mode of procedure. This, as a general rule, may be best accomplished by not arraigning the prisoners in large bodies, when there is time, and when opportunity offers, to divide and try them in small numbers; and it is only in cases of great emergency, when the interests of the State would suffer by delay, that this rule should be departed from.

Pay.—Artillery and Engineers.

Fort William, Jan. 19, 1859.—No. 94 of 1859.—Under instructions from the home authorities, and in continuation of Government General Order, No. 1239, of August 27, 1858, the Honourable the President in Council is pleased to notify that of the lieutenant colonels and lieutenants of royal artillery and engineers serving in India, those who in England would be restricted to majors' and 2nd lieutenants' pay, shall in India receive the pay and allowances of major and 2nd lieutenant respectively.

2. In like manner three-fourths the fixed establishment of lieutenant colonels in the artillery, and four-fifths in the engineers of Her Majesty's Indian forces, also two-thirds of the fixed complement of lieutenants in either corps, counting from the top of the list, shall receive the pay and allowances of those ranks, and the residue the pay and allowances of major and 2nd lieutenant respectively.

3. Second captains in the Royal or Indian horse artillery or engineers shall receive the pay and allowances of captains; but in the foot artillery they shall receive thirteen pence per diem less.

This exceptional rate for the 2nd captains of foot artillery is shown in the margin.*

The sum held to be included as military pay, in any consolidated civil salaries of 2nd captains of foot artillery, is Company's rupees one hundred and twenty-three, thirteen annas, and eight pice per month (Rs. 123 18s. 8p.), or thirteen pence per diem less than in the case of a captain.

4. This order has effect from 27th August last, and is applicable to the three Presidencies.

Civil Furloughs.

Home Dept., Fort William, Jan. 26.—Notifications.—The following extract from a resolution passed by the Right Hon. the Gov. Gen. in Council on this date, showing the number of furloughs that will be available during the season 1859-60, for the members of the Civil Service, is published for general information:—

Para. 4. The Gov. gen. in Council is of opinion that the state of affairs in India is now such as to admit of a relaxation of the rule prohibiting the grant of ordinary furloughs. Serious inconvenience would, however, arise in the Bengal Presidency if the entire number of fifty-one furloughs were at once to be granted; and it is, moreover, necessary to provide specially, on this occasion, that the furloughs allowed should be enjoyed in fair proportion by the members of the Bengal Civil Service attached to either division of the Presidency, and that some furloughs should be reserved for officers, irrespective of their seniority, who by particular services and severe exertions may appear to the Government to deserve the indulgence.

5. His Excellency in Council is, therefore, pleased to resolve that from March 1, 1859, 34 furloughs (being two-thirds of the whole number) shall, after deducting those already taken on medical certificate, be made available for the members of the Bengal Civil Service in the following manner:—

6. Eleven furloughs have already been allowed to members of the service on medical certificate, and there remain, therefore, 23 furloughs for allotment to make up the number of 34.

7. Of these 23 furloughs, 10 will be held available, in the first instance, for members of the service attached to the Lower Provinces, and 13 for members attached to the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and Oude.

8. Of the ten furloughs allotted to the Lower Provinces, five will be given to applicants before the 1st March in order of seniority, and five to such officers irrespective of seniority as the Lieutenant Governor may name as particularly deserving of the indulgence, provided they have resided a sufficient time in India to entitle them to furlough.

9. Of the thirteen furloughs reserved for the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab and Oude, six will be given to applicants before the 1st March in order of seniority, and seven to such officers, irrespective of seniority, as may be recommended by the head of the local government or administration in the proportions noted in the margin,* provided as above that their residence in India is sufficient to entitle them on furlough.

10. If the full number of officers are not recommended by the local authorities, the remaining available furloughs allotted to applicants in order of seniority, and if all the furloughs allotted to one division of the presidency are not taken they will be held available for officers of the other division.

	In garrison or cantonment within the 200 miles limit.	In the field or beyond the 200 miles limit.
* Pay and Indian Allowance...	251 2 8	251 2 8
Regimental House-rent .....	50 0 0	0 0 0
Doctage .....	75 0 0	75 0 0
Extra Batta .....	0 0 0	21 5 0
Total .....	376 2 8	447 7 8

* North-Western Provinces, 8; Punjab, 3; Oude, 2—total, 7.

11. Furloughs will continue to be given to applicants on medical certificate, without reference to the above arrangement, so long as the whole number of fifty-one furloughs is not exceeded.

Promissory Notes.

Financial Dept., Jan. 26.—Notification.—Referring to the Notification, Nos. 27 and 31, issued from this department on the 20th and 27th of July, 1857, and to the Notification, No. 63, issued from this department on the 19th November, 1858, under which promissory notes of four per cent., three-and-a-half per cent., and four-and-a-half per cent. loans, and transfer loan securities, were severally allowed to be received in part subscription to the open five per cent. loan, it is hereby notified that the receipt of the said promissory notes and transfer loan securities in part subscription to the said five per cent. loan will be closed after the 30th April next.

It is further notified that the sub-treasurers at Calcutta, Madras and Bombay have been authorised to receive money for the purchase of treasury Bills, payable to order, and bearing interest at the rate of three pies, or one fourth of an anna a day for every one hundred rupees.

On money being paid into those treasuries, the said sub-treasurers will issue loan certificates in the usual manner, which certificates will be exchanged at the officers of the accountants general at the several presidencies for treasury Bills, as soon as possible.

The Bills will be paid off at par, at the general treasuries of the presidencies from which they may be issued, at the option of the holders, after the expiration of the year from the date of issue. They will also, after the expiration of one year from the date of issue, be receivable at par, with allowance for any interest due upon them, in payment of Government revenue, into any treasury of the presidencies from which they may have been issued, or in subscriptions to the present five per cent. loan, or, at the option of the holders, to any loan that may then be generally open, as well as in liquidation of all Government demands at the general treasuries of the several presidencies, and in payments on account of salt, opium, and customs.

Bills issued by the accountant general in Calcutta will be receivable as above in payment of Government revenue, into the treasuries of Bengal, the N.W. Provinces, Oude, and the Punjab.

The interest on the bills will be payable half-yearly at the general treasuries of the several presidencies only.

The bills will also be liable to be paid off at the option of Government, at the general treasuries of the presidencies from which they may be issued, at any time after the expiration of one year from the date of issue, provided that notice of such intention be given in the Calcutta Gazette at least three months before the date of proposed payment. After such notice is given interest on the bills will cease to run from the day on which they shall have been notified for payment.

The bills will be issued in sums of Rs. 1,000, Rs. 5,000, and Rs. 10,000.

C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Sec. to Govt. of India.

ROMANCE OF THE MUTINY.—The narrative of the Indian mutiny is being gradually disenchanted, and if we live long enough we shall see it produced in a reliable form. As if the incidents of 1857 were not, when truthfully detailed, sufficiently horrible, spirited newspaper correspondents called largely into requisition the flowers of romance; and at home "the agony was piled up" to a fearful extent in Exeter Hall by stories of human sacrifice, suffering, and devotion, which, unlike the works of the Minerva press, were not even fictions founded upon facts. The last fairy tale that has collapsed at the touch of truth is one that was very successful for a time, never being received, when dramatically told, without a thrill of horror mingled with admiration. It referred to the heroic defence made by Captain Skene and his lady, and his then (when further resistance was hopeless) having shot her, and finally himself. All this, we now learn from the Jhansi correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, had no foundation whatever. "He was bound with all the other male Europeans at the fort after surrendering his arms, and the whole party—men, women, and children—were marched beyond the walls to the Jakhem Bagh, and every individual there butchered in cold blood. The Jail Darogah cut down Captain Skene, and it is said that a fellow, now in Jhansi Jail, drew his sword across Mrs. Skene's throat." As a result of the discovery that the crimes and miseries of the mutiny were grossly and wickedly exaggerated, a marked revulsion of feeling has taken place in the public opinion of England; and now a tale of horror connected with India, no matter how well authenticated, would not be listened to. So much for the promotion of a good cause by reckless or dishonest advocates—Bombay Gazette.

MEN v. MACHINERY.—The copyists employed in the Bengal Secretariat have submitted a memorial to the Government of India for transmission to the Secretary of State in Council. The memorialists state that it has been ascertained that printing will entail upon the State a heavier expense than the copying system, but with reference to expedition preference is in favour of the former. The memorialists also beg that, as the introduction of printing into the public offices in India will deprive them of their livelihood, his lordship will be pleased to extend to them the benefit of the uncovenanted pension rules applicable to the uncovenanted judicial officers, and that the gratuity rules of 1831 may be made applicable in their case. This memorial, together with Mr. Secretary Young's remarks upon it, which refutes all the arguments of the petitioners, will be despatched to the India House by next mail.

Close of the Campaign in Oude.— Despatch from the Commander- in-Chief.

H. E. the Gov. Gen. directs the publication of the subjoined despatch from H. E. the C. in C.

In it Lord Clyde announces that the campaign in which the troops under his immediate command have been engaged is closed, and that rebellion no longer exists in Oude.

The Gov. Gen. seizes the earliest opportunity of tendering his warmest thanks to the C. in C. and to the noble army which he leads, for their accomplishment of this good work.

By a large and complete scheme of combined operations, laid down carefully, and carried out inflexibly and irresistibly, this happy result has been achieved without a single check, and with no needless waste of life.

The authority of the British Govt. has been asserted mercifully in Oude; but it is now established and made manifest to all, and from this day it shall be maintained in unassailable strength.

The Gov. Gen. desires to record his special acknowledgments to Maj. gen. Sir Hope Grant, K.C.B., and to Maj. gen. Sir Wm. Mansfield, K.C.B., for the new services rendered by those distinguished officers in this campaign.

His Lordship also desires to thank the officers who have commanded brigades, and the regimental commanders of the army of Oude, for the complete success to which, each in his part, they have contributed.

The best acknowledgments of the Gov. Gen. are due to Maj. Norman, Lieut. col. Macpherson, Capt. Allgood, and the officers of the army, staff, and to Col. Sterling, C.B., and the personal staff at Hd.-qs., for the efficient assistance which they have given to the C. in C.

The Gov. Gen. well knows the value to be attached to the judgment, temper, and energy of the chief commissioner of Oude, and thoroughly appreciates the importance of the co-operation which the C. in C. and the army have received from him. His Lordship emphatically thanks Mr. Montgomery for his admirable service to the state, as the head of the local govt. in Oude.

The difficult functions entrusted to Maj. Barrow, C.B., special commissioner in the C. in C.'s camp, and to Maj. Bruce, C.B., superintendent of police in Oude, have throughout the campaign been discharged judiciously and successfully, and with a zeal which calls for the Gov. Gen.'s special acknowledgments.

It will be very gratifying to the Gov. Gen. to bring to the notice of the Queen's Govt., the exemplary manner in which the Queen's army in Oude and the officers attached to it have done their duty.

R. J. H. Bunch, Maj. Gen.,
Secy. to the Govt. of India, Mil. Dept.,
with the Gov. Gen.

To H. E. the Visct. Canning, Viceroy and Gov. Gen.

Hd. qrs., camp on the Raptée, 7th Jan., 1859.

MY LORD,—When I last had the honour to address your Ex. on the progress of the campaign in Oude on the 25th Nov. 1858, I reported that the first half of it had been brought to a conclusion, the rebels having been for the most part driven across the Gogra, with the exception of the Seetapore district, which stretches from the border of Rohilkund to the neighbourhood of Lucknow.

It is now my pleasing duty further to report to your Ex. that the campaign is at an end, that there is no longer even the vestige of rebellion in the province of Oude, and that the last remnant of the mutineers and insurgents has been hopelessly driven across the mountains which form the barrier between the kingdom of Nepal and H.M.'s empire of Hindostan.

These results have been attained by following the course of action first initiated in the month of July, when the campaign of Oude for the reduction of the country really commenced, viz., by not committing the troops to a forward movement until I should be ready to support it on every side, and so to convert a march into a thorough process of occupation, as was done in the Doab last year after the battle of Cawnpore.

Due preparation once made the troops have always been instantly thrown forward, in spite of every difficulty of season, and their work rendered permanent.

Hence it arose that the campaigns in Behar, Goruckpore, and Oude have been always treated as a whole, and I have in great measure continued to trust to my own judgment, to fix the date when decisive operations should commence in each territory, with due regard to the general plan, from the great outline and features of which a departure has not at any time been permitted.

It is with no ordinary feelings of satisfaction and of thankfulness to the officers and soldiers of the army, who have displayed such unwearied constancy, perseverance, and fortitude, in giving execution to my orders, that I have it consequently in my power to announce to your Ex., that on the 1st of Jan., the last day of clemency permitted under the proclamation of her gracious Majesty the Queen, it was reported to me by the special commissioner attached to my camp in a civil capacity, that the law and civil administration had been re-established in every district in Oude, similar reports having been made respecting Goruckpore and Behar a few weeks previously.

On the 31st Dec., 1858, the rebels were engaged for the last time by me, as a military body in Oude, and driven across the border. The force actually with me is encamped close to it. The Begum with her immediate followers having been as yet deaf to the offers of H.M.'s clemency, has sought an asylum in Nepal, while nearly every chief or talookdar, I may almost say without an exception, whose hands have not been imbrued in murder, has surrendered, and is now in the course of making an amicable arrangement with the chief commissioner of Oude.

The disarmament of the people, and the dismantling of the forts of the country have proceeded rapidly under the protection of the columns and garrisons left in different parts of the province, as the general advance of the long line pressed further onwards, until at length it was arrested by the mountains of Nepal, the frontier of H. M.'s ally.

Many hundred guns, and about three hundred and fifty thousand arms of different descriptions have been collected in Oude, and more than three hundred forts have been destroyed.

A considerable number of the mutineers have surrendered, and been allowed to retire to their homes, and the population of the country is settling down in all directions, in the most satisfactory manner.

I now present to your Ex. a slight sketch of the military movements of the last six weeks.

It will be in the recollection of your Excellency that a few hours after the evacuation of Shunkerpore (on the 16th Nov., 1858), by Banee Madho, the force which had been concentrated for the reduction of that place, was broken up. Brigdr. Taylor, C.B., H. M.'s 79th highlanders, having been sent with a strong brigade of all arms to Fyzabad, with orders to cross the Gogra at that point.

Sir Hope Grant had been ordered to march in a direct line to the Goomtee. Leaving his force under Brigdr. Horsford, C.B., rifle brig., to reduce the country stretching from Sultanpore to Lucknow, Sir H. Grant repaired with the Hd.-qs. Hodson's horse to Fyzabad, according to instruction, to take charge of the first Trans-Gogra movement.

He was desired to assume command of the troops in the Goruckpore district, under Brigdr. Rowcroft, B.N.I., and to combine them with the troops at Fyzabad, for the purpose of commencing the clearance of the Trans-Gogra district, arrangements being at the same time made to support the movement from Lucknow and the various posts held between that city and Fyzabad. In the meantime an excellent bridge had been completed, at the latter place, by Lieut. col. Nicholson, R.E.

Sir Hope Grant gave effect to his instruction in his usual brilliant manner, crossed the Gogra on the 25th Nov., and engaged a large body of insurgents under the Rajah of Gonda and Mehndee Hoosein, taking six guns and utterly routing the enemy, with but small loss to himself. Gonda was then occupied by Sir Hope Grant, and Brigdr. Rowcroft was gradually pushed forward across the Raptée to Heer in the Goruckpore district; this latter movement driving the rebels, who had so long annoyed the western frontier of that district, into Toolseepore in Oude to the north of the Raptée.

It had now become necessary for Sir Hope Grant to stop his forward movement until the advance along the line had been made, otherwise that which we most dreaded might probably have taken place, and the rebels passing round his right flank under the mountains might have invaded Tirhoot and Behar.

He was accordingly warned to use the greatest care to prevent such a catastrophe, and to confine himself to that duty for the present.

In the meantime the other brigades of the army had not been idle. After the fight of Dhoondea-Khaira I moved by forced marches to Lucknow with the troops.

Another brig., broken up in the Roy Bareilly district, furnished moveable columns, which respectively under Lieut. col. Gordon, roy. art., and Lieut. col. Carmichael, H.M.'s 32nd regt., pursued Banee Madho to the banks of the Gogra, Lieut. col. Carmichael taking up the running as it were from Lieut. col. Gordon.

While Lieut. col. Carmichael was in pursuit, Brigdr. Horsford intercepted Banee Madho, who, flying in confusion, was driven with his followers across the Goomtee by Brigdr. Horsford's cav. and h. art. under Lieut. col. Sir W. Russell, Bart., 7th hussars. All these officers distinguished themselves by the decision and celerity of their movements. Finding on my arrival at Lucknow on Nov. 23 that I should be obliged to stop there a few days to make certain arrangements, and to meet the demands of the correspondence of the army, the brig., which had latterly accompanied me, was not allowed to halt, but was pushed on at once under Brigdr. Eveleigh, C.B., H. M.'s 20th foot, to assist in the reduction of the Seetapore district. On the 2nd Dec. Brigdr. Eveleigh occupied the Fort of Oomeriah after a sharp resistance; he remained there for three days, engaged in levelling it to the ground. This fort, owing to its position, had hitherto barred the north-west road from Lucknow, and had been for a long time a source of much inconvenience.

Brigdr. Horsford, having completed his prescribed duty on the right bank of the Goomtee, had now marched through Lucknow. Another brigade formed under Brigdr. Purnell, C.B., H. M.'s 90th L. I. at Nawabgunge Barabunkee, was joined to him.

I left Lucknow on the 5th Dec., and reached Byram Ghat with Brig. Horsford's brigade on the next day. I found Banee Madho's followers, who had retreated before Lieut. col. Carmichael, still lingering on the opposite side of the river.

Sir Hope Grant having been previously ordered to occupy Secroora in their rear, they quickly disappeared, and retreated northwards as soon as they became aware of his march from Gonda to that place.

It appeared to me unavailing to delay the campaign during the tedious process of collecting boats and materials to bridge the Gogra.

Leaving, therefore, Brigdr. Purnell with his brigade to effect that purpose, I marched at the rate of twenty miles a day to Fyzabad, crossed the Gogra at that place, and thence proceeded in two marches to Secroora, followed by Col. Christie, H. M.'s 80th foot, with a detail of troops.

Sir Hope Grant waited to receive me at Secroora by appointment, while his troops had been already pushed one march on their way to Bulhampore on the Raptée.

The Maj. gen. was now instructed to commence his movement immediately on Toolseepore, by causing Brigr. Rowcroft to bring forward his right shoulder and invade the Toolseepore territory from the N.W. corner of Goruckpore. A strong post was also formed at Simree to ward off the chance of the Brigdr.'s advance being turned to the eastward. Bala Rao was reported to hold Toolseepore in considerable strength.

I then marched forward to Bareitch with Brigdr. Horsford, the Begum and her forces retiring from Boondee, and the Nana from Bareitch as I moved on.

At the same time Brigdr. Eveleigh, who had been directed on Fyzabad, was ordered to take post at Gonda, to form a reserve to the columns moving northwards, to settle the country and level the forts.

Brigdr. Purnell was desired to assist in the guard of the Gogra to the N.W.; one of his regiments, H.M.'s 23rd fusiliers, marching up the small Doab between the Chowka and Sarjoo to Mullapore, with two guns and a detachment of irr. cav.

In the same manner Brigdr. Troup, B.N.I., who after the fall of Biswah had taken post at Jehangirabad on the Chowka, was ordered to throw H.M.'s 60th rifles with two guns, and a detachment of cavalry across that stream, and to extend the remainder of his force to the left.

The various forces at Mohumdee, Shanjeahapore, Phillibheet, Madho, Tanda, &c., on the Rohilcund frontier, were put well on the alert, so that no resource might be left to the rebel forces but to surrender or to take to the hills of Nepal.

To cause this pressure to be still more felt before the last advance was made, Col. Christie was detached from Bareitch and ordered to march up the left bank of the Sarjoo to Durmapore. He left Bareitch on the 21st, the movement of the various columns having been delayed by rain for some days.

On the 23rd I left Bareitch, passed Nanparah on the 26th, and after marching twenty miles on the day, attacked a considerable body of rebels at Burgidia. Their left flank was turned. They fled after making a slight resistance, and were pursued until night-fall, leaving their guns in our hands.

On the 27th the force marched on the fort of Musjidia. This place was taken after three hours of vertical fire from two mortars, and a cannonade from an 18-pdr and an 8-inch hwzr.; the infantry being carefully laid out to command the enemy's embrasures and parapets.

I have much satisfaction in dwelling on the manner in which this fort was captured, with a very trifling amount of loss to the troops engaged. The Chief Engineer, Colonel Harness, R. E., has reported it to be one of the strongest, as respects artificial defences, that he has seen in India. But like all the others, it was without bomb-proof cover, and consequently fell easily into our hands after a few hours of well directed fire.

As your lordship is aware, every brig. has been carefully provided throughout the war, since the fall of Lucknow, with heavy guns, to ensure similar results in the attack of the forts of Oude.

The following detail of troops were at army hd. qrs.:—F. trp. r. h. a.; half a heavy field batt. r. a.; 23rd co. r. e.; hd. qrs. and 150 sabres, carbns.; 7th (Queen's Own) hussars; squad. 6th Madras l. e.; hd. qrs. and 8 comps. H.M.'s 20th regt.; 2nd batt. rifle brig.; 1st Belooch batt.; detach. Oude police, joined on the evening of that day by the 1st Punjab cav.

On the 29th the troops returned to Nanparah, made a forced march on the night of the 30th to the vicinity of Bankee, where the enemy had loitered under the Nana. He was surprised and attacked with great vigour, driven through a jungle which he attempted to defend, and finally into and across the Raptée, the 7th hussars entering that river with the fugitives. On this occasion the troops distinguished themselves, more particularly the 2nd batt. rifle brig., under Col. Hill, and the 7th hussars, under Lieut. col. Sir William Russell. I have to deplore the loss of Maj. Horne, 7th hussars, who was drowned in the waters of the Raptée. He had the left wing of the regt.; Capt. Stisted, who led the 1st squad., was rescued with great difficulty from a similar fate.

The next day it was reported that all the bodies of rebels which had been retreating before us from the day of our arrival at Byram Ghat had either surrendered or passed the Nepal frontier.

In these various affairs eighteen guns fell into our hands.

Col. Christie had a successful skirmish on the 23rd Dec., and two guns in pursuit. He then made a circuit to the north by Pudnaha, and rejoined my camp on the 3rd Jan.

In the meantime Brigdr. Rowcroft attacked Toolseepore on the 23rd Dec., driving Bala Rao from that point to the foot of the mountains, and taking two guns. Sir Hope Grant was alarmed about his flank being turned to the eastward and to the north of Goruckpore. Acting according to his instructions and with great judgment, he made that point absolutely safe, before renewing his attack on Bala Rao. That being done, he advanced through the jungles on that leader, and took fifteen guns from him, almost without the show of resistance on the part of the rebels; the latter dispersing and seeking refuge in the adjacent hills, and Bala Rao flying into the interior, as the Nana, his brother, had done before him.

Thus has the contest in Oude been brought to an end, and the resistance of 150,000 armed men been subdued with a very moderate loss to her Majesty's troops, and the most merciful forbearance towards the misguided enemy.

For the present Brigdr. Horsford has been left watching the Nepal frontier, where the Raptée debouches from the mountains. A similar arrangement will be made in the Toolseepore district.

I propose to give charge of the position to Sir Hope Grant, and to return to Lucknow myself forthwith.

I desire to offer my particular acknowledgments to the chief commissioner of Oude, Mr. Montgomery, for the cordiality and good will with which he has been pleased to co-operate with me in the execution of his high office. The instructions issued by him to the officers under his orders were most eminently calculated to facilitate the progress and efforts of the troops.

His two representatives in my camp, Maj. Barrow, C.B., special commissioner, and Maj. Bruce, C.B., superintendent of the Oude police, won my warmest thanks, for the manner in which they have given effect to the instructions of the chief commissioner.

Sir Hope Grant's despatches during the last six months have told the story of the admirable part taken by him in this war. I cannot say too much in his praise. He has the rare merit of uniting the greatest boldness in action, a firm and correct judgment, and the most scrupulous regard for his orders and instructions.

I desire also to recommend to your Excellency's most favourable consideration, the officers who have commanded brigades, at different times, in the army of Oude.

Some have been employed in more active situations than others, but all have acted with real zeal and devotion to the common cause. I therefore include them in one list.

The late Col. Berkeley, C.B., H.M.'s 32nd L.I.; Brigdr. Horsford, C.B., rifle brig.; Brigdr. Taylor, C.B., 79th highlanders; Brigdr. Eveleigh, C.B., 20th regt.; Brigdr. Purnell, C.B., 90th L.I.; Brigdr. Barker, C.B., R. A.; Brigdr. Wetherall, C.B., unattached; Brigdr. Pinckney, C.B., 73rd regt.; Brigdr. Hall, C.B., 82nd regt.; Brigdr. hon. P. Herbert, C.B., 82nd regt.; Brigdr. Jones, C.B., 6th drag. gds.; Brigdr. Hagart, C.B., 7th huss.; Brigdr. Troup, B.N.I.; Brigdr. Fischer, Madras N.I.; Col. Kelly, C.B., 34th regt.; Col. Christie, 80th regt.

I refrain from troubling your Excellency with a long list of the officers who have commanded regiments and have filled the subordinate staff appointments. I wish to say that they and the men under their command, throughout the long struggle carried on without intermission in every season of the year, ten months having elapsed since the fall of Lucknow, during which they have ever kept the field, have been distinguished by a discipline and a constancy unsurpassed in any war.

The service was attended by great fatigue, by never-ceasing sickness, and was performed alike during the intense heat of the summer, the languor of the Indian rains and the more bracing season of winter. But the discipline of H.M.'s troops never swerved.

All ranks have emulated one another in their exertions. For this we have to thank the high sense of duty and the personal example of regimental commanders and staff officers, the watchful and provident care of the staff and regimental surgeons, and the admirable spirit which animates the soldiers of H.M.'s regiments of every denomination. It is indeed a subject of pride to have had the honour of commanding such an army.

I cannot conclude this despatch, without referring to the very great and cordial assistance which I have constantly received from Maj. gen. Sir W. Mansfield, K.C.B., the chief of the staff. As it seems probable that active operations will now cease, I have the greatest pleasure in seizing the opportunity of recording my grateful sense of what I owe to this officer, and of recommending him in the strongest possible manner for the favourable consideration of your Excellency.

Sir W. Mansfield executed all the details of the various operations which I had thought it advisable to order, with the greatest ability, and showed the most unwearied diligence in directing, as was necessary, the simultaneous movements of so many bodies of troops, scattered often in small detachments over a very great extent of country, and his care and attention have in a great measure tended to bring about the very rapid and favourable results which have been obtained, and the course of which has been already related.

The officers who have more particularly worked, under the chief of the staff during the last year as regards the execution of their various offices in respect of the war, are Maj. Norman, deputy adj. gen. of the army, Lieut. col. Macpherson, off. q. m. gen. of the army, and Capt. Allgood, assist. q. m. gen.

The merits of Maj. Norman are well known to your Excellency, and he has continued to deserve my highest approbation.

Col. Macpherson has always performed his duty to my satisfaction, and he has found a very able and industrious assistant in Capt. Allgood. The latter has been with me from the time I first took the field in 1857.

I have the honour to recommend these three officers to your Excellency's favourable notice.

It remains for me to solicit your Excellency's protection to the officers of my personal staff, and of that of Sir William Mansfield.

I am under real obligation to my mily. secy. Col. Sterling, C.B., who has ever been employed in the most confidential and important manner throughout the transactions of the past year to my entire satisfaction.

The other officers alluded to, have performed their duties in the most careful, intelligent, and active manner.

They are as follows:—Lieut. col. Metcalfe, 4th Europeans, Persian interpreter; Capt. Alison, H.M.'s 19th foot; Lieut. the Hon. J. C. Dormer, H.M.'s 13th L. I., A.D.C. to myself; Lieut. col. Crealock, H.M.'s 90th L. I., deputy. asst. adjt. gen. to the chief of the staff; Lieut. Flood, H.M.'s 53rd regt., A.D.C.; Capt. Visct. Dangan, coldstream gds., acting A.D.C. I have the honour to be, my lord, with the greatest respect, your Excellency's very obedient, humble servant,

General C. in C., East Indies. CLYDE,

Action beyond Sindwaho.

ALLAHABAD, 6th Jan., 1859.

The rt. hon. the Gov. gen. is pleased to direct the publication of the following despatch from Maj. gen. Michel, C.B., comdg. Malwa div., No. 373, dated 22nd Oct. 1858, reporting an engagement with the enemy between Sindwaho and Marownee, on the 19th Oct., 1858.

His lordship desires to record his entire concurrence in the approbation expressed by h. e. the C. in C. in regard to these operations:—

From the Maj. gen. comdg. Malwa div. to the
Adj. gen. of the army.

ALLAHABAD, Camp Lullutpoor, hd. qrs., M.D.A., 22nd Oct., 1858.

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you, for his lordship the C. in C.'s information, that having marched on the 18th inst. from Balabait to Narhut, for the purpose of covering Tehree, I received information at midnight that the enemy had marched from Lullutpoor to Sindwaho, and were at that place and the neighbouring villages, evidently with an intention of turning the protected ghats of the Jamni river, and passing to the east.

2. At four a.m., 19th Oct., I marched for Sindwaho, force as detailed below,* expecting to reach it before the rebels had passed beyond it; however, the darkness of the morning, and the impossibility of finding the road, prevented our arrival until about half-past eight a.m., when I found the rebels (aware of our approach from a bugle having been sounded contrary to orders) drawn up on a hill beyond Sindwaho, on the road to Marownee.

3. Their force was about 10,000 fighting men, amongst whom were vast numbers of sepoys and regulars of contingents, with four guns.

4. As I did not intend to permit them to proceed to the east, I rapidly advanced with a portion of my cav. parallel to their extreme left.

5. The enemy, aware of my intention, came down in strength and boldly attacked the cav. (8th hussars and 1st By. lancers); but were gallantly charged and driven back by those regts. and 17th lancers.

6. The horse art., having now arrived on the ground with the rest of the cav., were played upon by the enemy's guns.

7. At this moment the inf. were required, and Capt. Cameron with the 92nd highlanders, Col. Hope with 71st reg., both in line, and Capt. LeMarchand's nine-pdr. battery came up on our left flank, followed by the 19th reg. N.I. on their left rear, and drove the enemy up the hill.

8. The enemy then tried to turn both flanks, and the h. a. and some cav. were so hardly pressed on the right by the enemy, posted in a field of high corn, as to enforce the necessity of bringing up the 19th N.I., and grape was eventually necessary to drive the rebels back.

9. The 92nd highlanders also had to wheel to their left, and resist a flank attack on our extreme left.

10. The 71st reg. still advanced steadily to the front up the hill under Lieut. col. Hope, and drove the enemy back; and the four guns of the enemy were captured by the combined movement of the 71st and 92nd regts.

11. The enemy now retreated at all points, and a general pursuit was made; the heaviness of the ground, being nearly all cultivated land and its broken nature, caused the pursuit to be slow. The enemy constantly rallied, or rather got massed, and Lieut. col. Blake with his h. a., and Capt. LeMarchand with his horse batt. were frequently obliged to open fire to compel their retreat.

12. The pursuit was continued about nine miles, and was eventually checked by the extreme difficulty of the country and its jungly nature, and the division of the enemy's force into small parties.

13. The ability and zeal with which Lieut. col. Lockhart commanded his brigade permits me to bring his name prominently to the notice of his lordship. Col. DeSalis commanded his cav. with zeal.

14. These officers, whose separate reports I enclose, record with approbation the names of those officers who commanded portions of regiments under their command, viz.:—Lieut. col. Hope, comg. wing 71st Hdr. L.I.; Capt. Cameron, comg. 92nd Highlanders; Capt. Barrow, comg.

19th N.I.; Capt. LeMarchand, comg. B.A. (field batt.); Lieut. col. Blake, comg. 3rd t. By. H.A.; Lieut. col. Curtis, comg. 1st By. lancers; Capt. Sir Wm. Gordon, comg. H.M.'s 17th; Capt. Oldfield, comg. 3rd By. L.C.; Maj. Chetwode, comg. 8th hussars; Capt. Mayne, comg. Mayne's horse; and also of their respective staff officers—Capt. Parker, comg. H.M.'s 71st L.I.; Lieut. Jenkins, comg. H.M.'s 8th hussars.

15. Col. DeSalis specially records the steadiness of the horse art. under Lieut. col. Blake, when attacked by the enemy's infantry, in close proximity, in some high jowaree crops.

16. Lieut. col. Curtis, 1st lancers, in separate com. during a portion of the day (whose report I also forward), brings specially to notice the zeal of Maj. Chetwode, in com. of the 8th hussars, and the boldness of his personal exploits; as does Col. De Salis of the gallantry of Lieut. Wood, of the 17th lancers, who (having, from paucity of officers in the 3rd cav., volunteered during the campaign to command a tr. of the 3rd lt. cav.) on this occasion almost single-handed came up to and attacked a body of the enemy.

17. On one occasion, after the enemy's cav. had been repulsed, Lieut. col. Curtis's column of cav. were brought to a check by a deep gully; some few got across, gallantly led by some young officers of various corps, who all had personal encounters with the enemy, and whose merits are recorded by Lieut. col. Curtis. In all these records of approbation I cordially concur.

18. I am much indebted to my staff for active exertion in the field, viz.:—Capt. St. John, 92nd highlanders, actg. asst. q.m. genl.; Capt. Champion, 24th regt. N.I., asst. adjt. genl.; Maj. Elkington, H.M.'s 6th royal regt., A.D.C.; and Capt. Maude, 4th By. rifles N.I., and Lieut. Shewell, 23rd By. N.L.I., both of whom on this occasion, as well as at the actions near Ragghur and Mungrowlee, acted as staff officers in the field.

19. I am much indebted to Capt. Gordon Cumming, asst. pol. agent for the Gov. genl., whose zeal in procuring me information afforded me the opportunity of surprising the enemy, and whose aid in the field was most valuable.

20. In recording the general good conduct of the troops, I may state, that as on the cav. the whole of the loss of the day fell, so they did their duty well and gallantly. But I cannot refrain from expressing my admiration of that spirit of chivalrous endurance, which, during a rapid march of at least twenty miles over broken country, enabled our inf. to keep almost up to the cav., nor from recording a fact which shows the spirit of the British soldier, that notwithstanding the heat, when the firing commenced, all the sick of the 71st and 92nd regts. could not be restrained, but fell into the ranks, and so remained to the close of the day.

21. The result of this day's operations was the capture of four guns, and 500 of the enemy left dead on the field. The Nawab of Banda's palki, bloody, and evidently just evacuated, was captured during the pursuit.

J. MICHEL, Maj. gen., Comdg. Malwa Div.

INTERMITTENT DRAMAS.—The most singular point of all that has been told us about the Japanese stage is the order of performance. Three long pieces are frequently represented on the same day; not, as with us, one after the other in wholes, but in portions: namely, first, the first act of one, then the first act of a second, then the first act of a third; then, returning to the first play, the second act of it, and successively, the second acts of the second and third plays, and so on till all the three plays are played out. By this curious arrangement, any of the audience who wish to see only one of the pieces, or who have not patience to sit out the whole, may withdraw to attend to business, or to other diversions, or to smoke their pipes and drink rice beer, whilst the dramas they have no wish to see take their turn on the stage, and they can then return refreshed, to see and hear the next act of their favourite play.—Japan and her People.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

NETHERLANDS-INDIA AND THE CELEBES.

ANOTHER war in the East appears to be imminent, though one not directly affecting British interests. The Sultan of Boni, one of the many semi-barbarous rulers of Celebes, has been assuming airs of importance not to be surpassed by even a member of the Napoleonic race. Among other extravagances, he has claimed to be regarded as the paramount Power in the island, and on one occasion invited the neighbouring princes to a festival as if they had been his vassals. He acknowledged, indeed, that he considered them in that light, and fully intended to assert his own supremacy. Nor is this the first time that the Sultan of Boni has disputed the right and title of the Netherlands-India Government to act as the head of the Celebes confederacy. So far back as 1824 the State of Boni referred the question to the arbitrament of the sword, and was signally worsted in the struggle that ensued. The Boni army was defeated, the capital occupied by the Dutch, and the Sultan compelled to sign a contract acknowledging his conquerors as the supreme Power in the island. But, notwithstanding this severe lesson, the Sultan persisted in his projects of ambition and aggrandizement, and in the height of his infatuation commanded the Netherlands' flag to be everywhere reversed throughout his territories. The Dutch Government has therefore instructed the Vice-President of the Council to proceed to Boni and demand full reparation for the past, and securities for future good behaviour. Should this mission fail of success, a formidable expedition will be despatched under command of Major-General Steinmetz to teach the refractory Sultan to respect the might, if he cannot appreciate the forbearance, of the once powerful Government of Netherlands-India.

THE CHINESE IN FORMOSA.

It is no new remark that the misfortunes of individuals are oftentimes a great gain to the community. In this manner have many of the most important inventions and discoveries been made, and in no case is this truth more evident than in that of shipwrecked mariners, who have thereby become the pioneers of civilisation. It is in this hopeful light that we would read the simple but interesting narrative of the hardships endured by the crew of the Alert, a vessel lately cast away on the coast of Formosa. The tale is told by Mr. Groom, one of the sufferers, and apparently a passenger on board the ill-fated ship.

The Alert sailed from Hong Kong on the 26th September, with a crew consisting of thirty-eight Malays, Arabs, Bengalees, and Chinamen, in addition to the captain and four mates, a boatswain, a carpenter, and a boy. All went well for a few days till the ship was caught in the N.E. monsoon, when her progress became slow, and in every way uncomfortable, until she grounded off Formosa late in the evening of the 11th of October. The sea at once made a clean breach over the deck, swamping the gig as soon as it was lowered, and rendering the two other boats useless. All night long the crew were hanging on to the rigging, but when daylight dawned they made for the land on pieces of the wreck, consulting each his own safety. Mr. Groom, with the boatswain and two black men, reached the shore together, but before they set foot on dry land they were seized by some natives, who had put off on a sort of raft, and literally stripped to the skin. However, before they started for the neighbouring village they succeeded by their importunity in obtaining from their captors enough clothing to disperse their blushes, though not to dispel the cold. On entering the village they were, of course, surrounded by the inhabitants, men, women, and children, but not otherwise subjected to any annoyance. On the contrary, the old women showed them much kindness, giving the narrator "congee rice" to drink, and offering him a basin of rice and sweet potatoes boiled together, and seasoned with pickled cabbage and ginger.

"The men," says Mr. Groom, "were all fine, athletic-looking fellows, with a pleasanter and less sly looking cast of features than the Chinese I have met elsewhere, and have a much clearer skin; they were mostly armed with long knives and spears, but a few of them carried matchlocks. I was struck with the beautiful order in which all their weapons were kept, a clear proof that they were continually in use. The women were also of a different cast of countenance to the China women I had before seen. Most of them had their hair dressed with scarlet silk, which, with their large earrings, gave them a rather peculiar, but by no means unbecoming, appearance. I also noticed that scarcely any of them had small feet, but trotted about barefoot. The village was a very tumble-down affair, the joss house being the only pretty part about it, and this, with its grotesque images and painting, the little stream in front, and old gnarled trees in the background, was really very picturesque. The houses, or rather hovels, were nearly all made of mud, and surrounded by a fence of bamboo, or a low mud wall overgrown with a sort of prickly plant, something like our cactus."

After enjoying a heavy sleep for a couple of hours, Mr. Groom was awakened by an old woman, who presented him with "a pair of Chinese drawers, very old and very short, but, nevertheless, very acceptable." In the afternoon the four brothers in misfortune started off, without any opposition on the part of the villagers, for a town some seven miles distant, on the opposite side of the bay. There they met with the serang and sixteen of the crew, Bengalees and Chinamen. The town itself was a mass of ruins, "and completely gutted by fire." Though not otherwise ill-treated, they were immediately shut up in a dark room, sixteen feet by twelve, and left there, without food, until the following morning.

"The people here seemed quieter than the villagers; few had any weapons. Their dress was very simple, consisting of a blue Chinese shirt, full blue or white trousers reaching to the knee, and a large blue turban stuck jauntily on the head. They all carried the 'hun toheue,' or tobacco-pipe, mostly made of bamboo, with two little boxes of bone attached to it, one of which contained the tobacco, and the other the flint, steel, and tinder."

Next day they were joined by the captain, the second mate, and two more Bengalees. The native portion of the crew, finding that no one attempted to interfere with them, sallied forth on a begging expedition, and after a short time returned with a supply of radishes, rice, peanuts, and about 250 cash, equal to tenpence of English money. In the afternoon they were removed to a joss-house, where they "remained two days in great discomfort, for the stone floor was both damp and uneven." All day long the natives of the place used to gather round them, and squatting on their haunches would stare at them in stupid wonder for a whole hour at a time. Some of them would make vain efforts to master the English names of objects, but always mispronounced the letter r, and added an ejaculatory sound at the end of every word, as nose-a, pipe-a, &c., &c.

On the third evening some mandarins arrived, and next day the shipwrecked mariners received orders to follow the chief mandarin to Chung-wha, a walled town distant a day's journey. The road passed through a beautiful and well cultivated plain, "stretching from the sea-shore to the foot of a low range of hills about ten miles inland, behind which rose the magnificent chain of mountains from 10,000 to 12,000 feet high, which to all appearance divides the island of Formosa by an almost impassable barrier." They reached their destination that same evening, and next morning were regaled with "a large bucket of coarse rice and a basin of pork fat, cut into dice about an inch square." After breakfast they were allowed to wander about as they pleased, and about five in the afternoon dined off "rice, small salted fish, very dirty, and cabbage pickled in salt." Three days afterwards the captain, the fourth mate, and three seamen made their appearance, after having been given over as lost. As the captain had been severely wounded in the leg, one of the officers of a mandarin kindly took him into his own Yamun, and gave him a bed in his own room. Mr. Groom being invited to stay with his friend and share his bed, was thus enabled to describe the mode of life usual with Chinese gentlemen on the island.

"Lotea, as he was called, seldom turned out of bed before two o'clock P.M. The first thing he did on turning out was to make his bed—he then set to work, cleaned his opium pipes very carefully, filled his opium boxes, trimmed and lighted his lamp, and arranged his tray and smoking paraphernalia neatly on his bed—these duties being completed to his satisfaction he then washed, i.e., a basin of scalding water was brought in by a servant; into this Lotea dipped a very dirty looking cloth, and having squeezed it out, rubbed it once or twice over his face and neck, leaving the moisture occasioned thereby to dry on. He next took a mouthful of water from the same basin, and having rinsed his mouth, spat it out on the floor. His ablutions being now finished, he washed out his chow-chow basin, and wiped his chopsticks with the cloth he had just used for his face, and then lay down on his bed to smoke opium until breakfast was brought in. This was of the simplest description, a large China basin of rice, and two smaller ones containing fish and some other Chinese mess, of which he ate but sparingly, and washed down with tea sucked from the spout of a small teapot, in which hot tea was always kept for the benefit of all comers. He now returned to his beloved opium pipe, which he smoked with but little interruption until ten o'clock at night, receiving his visitors and underlings without changing his position. At ten or eleven P.M., he used to go out to pay a visit to his brother, who lived in the town. Here, too, he smoked from his entering the room until about one o'clock, at which time he returned and continued smoking and chatting until about four in the morning, and sometimes later, before he turned in."

This Mandarin was a "white button," but did not appear to be much engaged with public business. However this might be, he soon grew weary of his guests, and at the end of three days turned them out on the plea that he wanted the bed for a friend who was coming to visit him. Nevertheless he gave the Captain a bed, and consigned him to the care of a Chinese doctor, who eventually effected a cure by applying poultices of samshoo and pounded herbs to the sore, and by covering it with a powder which acted like blue-stone: the use of water, whether for cleansing or fomenting the wound, being strictly prohibited.

As Mr. Groom and the ship's carpenter knew something of watch-mending, they soon obtained some jobs, for which they were paid at rates varying from eightpence to two shillings. They were also enabled to add to their comforts by selling drawings of ships, &c.

About the second week in November the rice-harvest commenced, and is described as a very simple operation.

"The rice when ripe is cut handful by handful with a knife, slightly curved and much broader in the blade than our sickle. It is then made into a small bundle, and carried to a large tub on wheels, furnished with a bamboo screen at the back, to prevent the grain from flying about. At the edge of this tub is a small board, on which the bundle of paddy is struck with sufficient force to drive the grain from the ear. The straw is now thrown on one side to be used as fodder for the buffaloes, beds for the servants, thatch for houses, and various other purposes too numerous to mention; and the rice, which has fallen into the tub, is carried in baskets to the farm-yard, where it is spread out on a piece of ground beaten flat and hard for the purpose, to undergo the process of drying and winnowing."

The black sailors were more successful by begging than the others by their industry. One of them on leaving the island had fifty dollars in his possession, and another upwards of a hundred. The inhabitants, indeed, appear upon the whole to have treated them with far greater humanity than they are likely to have experienced had they been wrecked on the mainland. And yet they can be sufficiently cruel and barbarous, when in the mood, as may fairly be inferred from the modes of punishment in use amongst them:—

"During my residence in Chungwa," writes Mr. Groom, "one man was accused of murder, five unfortunates having fallen victims to his knife. He was condemned to be beheaded, and the sentence was forthwith carried into execution. The old Mandarin, who was the chief civil functionary in the island, held a court for the Administration of Justice every Friday night, commencing at about seven o'clock, and often not terminating until one or two A.M. I often attended these trials, at which the justice seemed to me to be administered in a most summary manner. Witnesses were several times severely punished on the spot for prevarication or contempt of court; one poor wretch, indeed, got 800 strokes, principally, as my boy told me, 'because he makes tell plenty lie,'—though in my opinion it was because he could not be induced to criminate the parties concerned in the robbery of a sampan. The instruments of punishment are certainly of Chinese extraction, ingenious and yet barbarous—the first generally used in the case of a stubborn witness or convicted offender, is a pair of ear-boxers (their proper name I am ignorant of), made of thick buffalo hide, in the shape of a pair of castanets, about six inches wide by eight in length. In these the three layers of buffalo hide are separated, just at the bottom, by strips of wood arranged in such a manner as to prevent them from closing completely, unless when forced together by a sharp blow at a word from the Mandarin. The tail of the victim is seized by the expectant executioners, and his head wrenched on one side so as to place the cheek to be operated upon uppermost. Two more executioners now come forward and inflict ten strokes alternately with these ear-boxers, until the sentence is carried out, each one laying on his blows with no light hand, and at each stroke calling the number of it in a sing-song tone. The number of blows is, of course, varied at the pleasure of the Mandarin. I have seen as many as 200 inflicted by 50 at a time. The face of the culprit after the punishments was sickening to look at; the jaws and cheeks swollen immensely, and suppurated with blood; the tongue also swollen so much as to render his words almost inarticulate; but, notwithstanding the seeming severity of the pain, the man still stuck to his lying, and, before he was taken away, received 600 more blows, as follows—200 on the front part of his thighs with a bamboo rod about the thickness of one's little finger, 200 on the bare back with a bundle of small bamboo canes, and 200 on the back of the thighs with a piece of flat bamboo about three feet long and three inches wide. Even this was not sufficient to force the truth from him, and he was conveyed back to his prison in a state beyond description. Every day at the gate of the Mandarin's yamen might be seen a number of miserable wretches, some with the wooden collars so much in vogue in China, others chained together by the necks in couples, with an immense stone attached to the chain, unshaven, dirty, ragged, and to all appearance half starved, but still impudent and unruly to the last."

The 9th of December was a joyful day for Mr. Groom and his companions in misfortune. On that morning they started for the seaport at which they were to embark for Amoy. On the following day they were presented with a good breakfast and the sum of one dollar each, and then placed on board four junks bound for Amoy. Their adventures, however, were not yet destined to terminate, for they were attacked by pirates, and one of the junks captured after a sharp engagement. The others reached Amoy in safety on the evening of the 11th, and next day their missing comrades unexpectedly made their appearance, having been landed by the pirates, probably through a wholesome dread of British retribution.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 4. ASSISTANT SURGEONS AT LUCKNOW.

Mr. RIDLEY asked the Secretary of State for India whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government now to confer any mark of distinction upon those assistant surgeons late in the service of the East India Company, who formed part of the garrison during the whole of the siege of Lucknow, and who were recommended in the despatch of General Inglis, of the 26th September, 1857, to the particular attention of the Government of India; or, if the rank of assistant surgeon does not allow such distinction to be conferred at the present time, whether he would cause that recommendation to be noted in the books, so that on their obtaining the rank of full surgeon they might receive a corresponding distinction to that already conferred on the four surgeons named in the above-cited despatch. He wished to obtain from the noble lord some public recognition or assurance—a promise would be much better—that when the proper time arrived there would be conferred upon them the same distinction as had been already conferred on the full surgeons.

Lord STANLEY replied that the assistant-surgeons who were named in General Inglis's despatch of the 26th of September, 1857, were five in number. He was glad that the hon. gentleman had given him this opportunity of paying a tribute of respect to gentlemen who had done their duty, and done it well, and had done it, moreover, under circumstances of considerable difficulty and danger. With regard to the particular honour suggested in the question, the hon. member must be aware that, holding the rank of assistant surgeons they were, according to an existing rule, not eligible for that distinction. As to the last recommendation, that if the rank of assistant surgeon did not allow such distinction to be conferred at the present time, the recommendation should be noted in the books, so that at their obtaining the rank of full surgeon they might receive a corresponding distinction to that already conferred on the four surgeons named in the despatch, it had been thought that it could not be adopted without the recommendation of the Governor General, and he had not, in the present case, given such recommendation. But, although he was obliged to make this statement, he had no hesitation in saying, on the part of the Government, that they would be glad to take any report recognising the service rendered by the assistant surgeons into consideration.

EUROPEAN TROOPS IN INDIA.

In moving the Army Estimates, GENERAL PEEL insisted on the impossibility of making any reduction in the number of men asked for in the estimate for the current year. It was necessary, he said, to look back to the state of the army previous to the outbreak of the Indian mutinies. The army had just then been reduced to a peace establishment, and the number of troops was adapted to the force required to perform military duties in India, in the colonies, and at home. Before the mutinies the British army consisted of twenty-three regiments of cavalry and 105 battalions of the line. Of these, four regiments of cavalry and twenty-four regiments of infantry, amounting to about 30,000 men, were upon the Indian establishment; leaving ten regiments of cavalry and eighty-one regiments of infantry upon the British establishment. That state of affairs had since been materially changed. Of the twenty-three regiments of cavalry and 105 battalions of infantry that formed the British army at the commencement of the year 1857 not less than twelve regiments of cavalry and seventy-three battalions of infantry were now in India, thus leaving only eleven regiments of cavalry and thirty-two battalions of infantry to perform the whole of the colonial and home duty. To these latter had since been added two regiments of cavalry and twenty-six battalions of infantry, making altogether at the present moment upon the British establishment thirteen regiments of cavalry and fifty-eight battalions of infantry. As it would be interesting to the House to know what was the prospect of the return of our troops from India, he had received permission to read an extract from a private letter of Lord Clyde to his royal highness the Commander in Chief, which was dated Allahabad Nov. 1, 1858, in which he stated that he thought he could now predict with absolute certainty the return of certain regiments to England early in the spring. He thought the 86th might return from Bombay, another regiment from Madras, and a third from the presidency of Bengal, in addition to those already ordered home by his royal highness. As the light Bengal cavalry would soon be fit to take the field, he hoped that the 9th lancers might also return. It might be interesting to the House to learn the exact names of the regiments that were now ordered home. They were the 9th lancers, the 10th foot, the 29th, the 32nd, the 53rd, the 78th, the 84th, the 86th, and the 89th. It was necessary that he should come to some understanding with his noble friend the Secretary of State for India as to the number of the regiments that might be expected home; for, if several regiments were to return unexpectedly, the strength of the army would be in excess of the force voted by Parliament; and, therefore, he must either come down to this House and ask for a supplementary vote, or he must reduce some of the second battalions that were now in course of formation. The arrangement that had been made was this—that the Indian establishment should consist of eleven regiments of cavalry and sixty-six regiments of infantry, while the British establishment should consist of fourteen regiments of cavalry, and sixty-five regiments of infantry. He had no doubt that if their prospects continued favourable, the Indian Government would be most happy to spare an additional number for the home service as early as possible. But, under any circumstances, he feared it would be a long time before it would be possible to reduce the Indian establishment much below fifty battalions. Taking that as the average, and if they proposed to keep up the present system of reliefs, which was found so necessary for the health of the soldiers—that was to say ten years abroad and five at home—he did not see how they could do with a less force than he had mentioned.

Sir G. LEWIS: What is the number of men in fifty battalions?

General PEEL: Taken in round numbers, about 50,000 men.

Sir H. WILLOUGHBY said he had no objection to offer to the proposed number of men. But he wished to learn from the hon. and gallant general at the head of the War Department what were the arrangements made with respect to the payment of those troops who were in depot in this country for Indian service, and whether that charge would fall on the Indian or the Imperial revenue. He should also be glad to receive some information on the subject of that large amount of artillery which was at present about to be sent to India, and the mere transport of which must cost a considerable sum. He confessed that he could not see any necessity for such a shipment at the present moment, when the mutiny was at an end.

Sir DE LACY EVANS agreed with the hon. baronet who had last addressed the committee, that it was hard to understand what was the policy on which the Government acted in sending out additional troops and more artillery to India. We had 15,000 less men in India during the height of the mutiny than we would have the ensuing year after that great outbreak had been completely quelled. He understood, too, that twelve batteries were under order for that country. Now he had not heard that there had heretofore been any deficiency in that branch of the service throughout the Indian struggle, and he saw no reason why an addition should at present be made to it to the extent of seventy-two field pieces.

General PEEL replied that having sat upon the Indian Commission he found that the point most strongly insisted upon by the witnesses was the necessity of having no more native artillery. The object of sending out the additional twelve batteries was to prevent the necessity of renewing the native force of that arm. The expense of those companies had fallen upon the Indian Government from the day of embarkation.

Sir H. WILLOUGHBY said he thought that the hon. and gallant general had rather misunderstood his observations when he supposed that he urged the desirability of relying upon the native artillery of India. It was very well known that some of the best artillery in the world had existed in the shape of a European force formerly in the pay of the East India Company. The question he wished to have explained was, why that force should not be retained, as it was a force accustomed to the climate, and, as he was informed, could be maintained at one-half the expense of a similar force sent from this country.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

The annual report of this company for the year ending 30th June, 1858, to the Secretary of State for India in Council, states that the receipts up to that date amounted to £3,820,804, and the expenditure to £3,040,281, leaving a balance of £780,523. The capital of the company now consists of £8,000,000, represented by 400,000 shares of £20 each, bearing guaranteed interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and of £333,300 debentures at 4½ per cent. per annum interest, issued for five years ending January, 1860. The total expenditure on the 30th of June, 1858, on the 88½ miles open for traffic in the Concan, and 42 miles in the Deccan, together 130½ miles, was £833,794, or £6,389 per mile, exclusive of rolling stock. The expenditure on the Bhore-ghat incline, 15½ miles in length, was £114,512 on the 30th of June, 1858, out of £426,860, the contract price. On the contract from Poonah to Sholapore, 163 miles in length, £132,314 was expended; from Wassind to Rotunda Nullah, 25 miles, £83,701 was expended; on the Thull-ghat incline, nine miles in length, £4,451 was expended; from Egutpoora to Bhosawal, 190 miles, £35,636 was expended; from Bhosawal to Jubbalpore, 332 miles, the contracts were not let. With regard to the portion of line open for traffic, 130½ miles, the net profit for the year ending the 30th of June, 1858, was equal to £3. 13s. 8d. per cent. on the whole cost, while on the 88½ miles of the Concan line the return was equal to £5. 0s. 4d. per cent. upon the capital cost, as against £4. 6s. 10d. per cent. on the previous year. This result is considered by the Board to be highly satisfactory.

BOOKS.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine. No. DXXI. Wm. Blackwood and Sons.

It is long since we have met with so learned, so eloquent, so universally interesting an article as that on "The Castes and Creeds of India," in the current number of Blackwood. The writer of this most able and excellent paper has taken in hand to show how the modern notions of caste have become distorted from a pure and natural origin. In the beginning the distinctions of caste were, in fact, distinctions of race, and indicated the relative positions of the different peoples who succeeded one another as rulers in the peninsula of Hindostan. Nothing can be more just or graphic than his masterly panoramic sketch of the earliest historical tribes, surrounded by the "wide sea of the secondary races," the Tamul, Telinga, and Canarese nations. Next he passes in review the Aryan or Sanscrit-speaking conquerors, headed by the Brahmins who "led the van of the migration, and whose intellectual superiority still entitles them to rank highest amongst the cognate nations which followed, and now live side by side with them." After these came the Kshatriyas, or warrior-caste of Menu, who for a while superseded the Brahmins, and usurped the chief power in the State, until in course of time they declined and became absorbed in the Rajpoot tribes. As the different races mingled together, the idea of caste took form and substance, and after a while resolved itself into a code of laws laying claim to divine authority. Caste thus gradually grew into a fashion, or rather a fixed institution, and came to be regarded as "a thing desirable in itself, and quite indispensable in every well-ordered community." From diversities of race it was by-and-by extended to diversities of employment, and trades and professions fell into distinct and hereditary brotherhoods. Caste, however, with all its exclusiveness, failed to preserve the conquerors from the contaminating influence of the inferior and conquered tribes. By degrees the pure theism of the Aryans became corrupted into an abominable idolatry, and their simple worship gave place to superstitious and degrading rites. But first let us observe the characteristics of social life among the Aryans, as they may be gleaned from the ancient hymns and prayers of the Vedas :—

If the Aryans do not speak much of their own cities, it is not because they were mere nomads when they entered India, but because they were a nation on the move. They had numerous flocks and herds, indeed, but they also cultivated the soil, and laid it out into fields. They "measure the land with a rod," they "plough the earth for barley," and they "bring home the produce of their fields in carts." They have towns, and practise many of the arts of civilised life. Weaving is an ordinary occupation, and furnishes the poetic imagination of the people with fine and effective similes. "Cares consume me," cries one, "as a rat gnaws a weaver's threads." "Night," says another, "envelopes the extended world like a woman weaving a garment;" and in another place day and night are likened to "two famous female weavers, interweaving their threads." They worked in iron, and also in gold;

they forged armour and weapons of steel; they had chariots, and carts, and harness, hundred-oared ships, and jars of wine. Merchants are amongst them, "covetous of gain," and whose ships are said, in hyperbole, to "crowd the sea," although no foreign products appear to have been in use. Tradesmen—or shopmen, as they would be now—were already up to the tricks of trade; so that the god Indra is besought not to "take advantage" of his worshippers "like a dealer." They had not yet coined money, but gold was esteemed wealth, and would be used as money by weight; and they used to keep their riches in a chest, or, as now, hide them in a hill or a well. Gambling, for which the natives of India have still a passion, was in vogue even then, and cowries were used as dice. We read of debts and debtors, and reverses of fortune,—and of course there are thieves. Medical science, though unarrayed in the pretentious complexity of modern times, was probably tolerably effective. At all events, they anticipated by more than three thousand years our hydropathic doctrine, one of their maxims being, that "all healing power is in the waters." They were also acquainted with the virtue of herbs; and one exclaims in prayer, "nourished by the sanitary herbs, may I live a hundred winters." Gold, horses, and bulls are given as presents, and golden rings and earrings are used as ornaments. Horses, indeed, appear to have been very plentiful; and "a hundred vigorous steeds" is not an unusual gift from a prince to a holy man. Chiefs go on forays, have plenty of chariots, sometimes with golden wheels and yokes, and with golden trappings for their horses; and there are processions, in which the chief at times has a thousand followers. Chariots and horsemen figure in war. Finally, as regards the female sex, their condition appears to have been free and natural. They are spoken of as "the light of the dwelling;" and some of the Vedic hymns are ascribed to female authors. The chiefs sometimes had a plurality of wives; they were splendidly attired, and rode in chariots; "ten chariots drawn by bay steeds carrying my wives," figure in a chief's procession; and we read also of female heroism, and of the wife of a chief accompanying him on a mid-night foray. There were also eunuchs and courtesans; and the latter, as is still the case in India, were not regarded in a very respectable light.

Their worship, we have said, was simple:—

The Aryans were never great temple-builders—inclining, like their cousins the Persians, and the Teutons of Europe, to worship in the temple of the Universe; and nearly all the magnificent temples for which India is famous are to be found in the peninsular portion of the country, where the population chiefly belongs to the pre-Aryan Tamil race. In the Vedic period the Aryans had no temples or idols of any kind. With the exception of the public Soma-festivals, which took place in a large shed constructed for the purpose—and of the prayers offered up and rites performed on the eve of battle—the worship appears to have been entirely domestic, carried on in the house of the worshipper. There were priests and rishtis, or holy men, who officiated on public or special occasions, and whose descendants swelled into the caste of the Brahmins; but the domestic worship appears to have been conducted on the patriarchal principle, by the head of the family. At sunrise, the first act was to kindle the fire on the altar (which was commonly their hearth also), or rather to awaken it from the ashes in which it had slumbered through the night: for in those days obtaining fire anew was a troublesome process, achieved by the friction of one piece of wood inserted in another. An offering of ghee, or clarified butter, apparently dropped into the fire or embers (a rite as useful as devotional), then took place, accompanied by an invoking of the particular deity to whom the offering was made. The ritual introduced towards the close of this Vedic period prescribes hymns to the gods, to be chanted by priests at these morning offerings; but doubtless the simple and quickly-performed offering of butter was all that was thought of by the people at large.

These extracts will suffice to illustrate the tone and style of this remarkable paper, and to excite the curiosity of our readers to become acquainted with the article in its integrity.

Curry and Rice. By Capt. G. F. Atkinson, B.E. London: Day and Son.

Had Captain Atkinson depended for success on his letter-press, he would have had little reason to congratulate himself on the popularity of his work. His pictorial illustrations, however, are excellent, and would be perfect in their way had he not chosen to represent the European residents at "Our Station" as unmitigated snobs. But his sketches of the natives are true to the life. The fat oily Hindoo, the haughty sensual-looking Mussulman, the roguish pedlar-merchant, the patient but artful domestic servant, are positive photographs.

So likewise are the incidents of Station society, and yet more characteristic is the occasional insight afforded into native life. "Our Nawab," is a splendid specimen of the Anglo-maniac native gentleman. Equally good in their way are "Our Garden," "Our Farmyard," "Our Agriculturists," and "Our Cook Room." It is to be regretted, indeed, that Captain Atkinson has not more largely illustrated the manners and customs of our Aryan cousins and Mahomedan fellow-subjects, in preference to caricaturing the monotonous existence of the unfortunate English exile. A few of these caricatures, such as "Our Bath," "Our Stage Coaching," and above all, "Our Wedding," are by no means deficient in humour, but their general tendency is to bring Anglo-Indian society into ridicule and to hold up the European residents as a fair object of satire. The letter-press, it may be said, is calculated to soften the impression conveyed by the engravings, but we question if any reader will venture beyond the first description. Now, no one would object to good-natured pleasantry kept within the bounds of moderation, but the attempt to raise a laugh out of everybody and everything is becoming a positive nuisance, and as such must be sternly discountenanced and "put down."

The Wife and the Ward; or, a Life's Error.
By Lieut. Col. E. Money. London: Routledge and Co.

The horrors of the Cawnpore massacre are surely too real and too recent to be fittingly introduced into the realms of fiction. Colonel Money, we think, would have done well to have been satisfied with depicting, "in a familiar style, English social life in Hindostan," and to have withheld his hand from "the saddest scene in the late Bengal mutinies." The earlier portion of his tale will generally be regarded as the most life-like and effective. He has not fallen into the common error of caricaturing the habits and manners of the European community, and of exaggerating their peculiarities. His officers are a gentlemanly, rational, intelligent set of men, such as one meets with in every well-conducted regiment, and their conversation is suitable to their position in society. His powers of description, too, are undoubtedly of a high order, as witness the steeple-chase at Dinapore, and the pig-sticking expedition into the jungles of Bengal. But he fails when he attempts to construct a plot or to portray character. He recalls with fidelity what has passed beneath his own eyes; but his inventive faculty does not soar above mediocrity. Some of his comments on the defects of the old system are judicious, and not inaptly stated, though their merit is that of a prophecy delivered after the event supposed to be predicted. In short, Colonel Money has produced a novel of fair average quality, and one likely to afford considerable gratification to persons previously acquainted with the outward forms and internal economy of Anglo-Indian society.

CAPTAIN CHARLES FELLOWES, R.N., has had an audience of the Queen, and delivered to her Majesty an Imperial Chinese flag taken from Commissioner Yeh's house at Canton.

HINDOO WOMEN.—A thousand years B.C. Hindoo women appear to have been as free as Trojan dames, or the daughters of Judea. Hymns in the Rig Veda mention them with respect and affection, comparing the goodness of the god Agni to that of "a brother for his sisters," and the brightness of this god to the shining of a woman in her home. Women, moreover, go out adorned for festivals, or mingle in the mid-night foray. Even in the succeeding phase of Hindoo life, when the Brahmins contemplated the soul beneath the shadow of Himavat, women attended their discourses and took part in their discussions. We find in one of the Upanishads a king holding a solemn sacrifice, and inviting his chief guests to state their opinions of theology; and amongst these guests a learned female named Garga is conspicuous.—Life in Ancient India.

No one could be better qualified than Mr. Stocqueler for such a task, and certainly he has accomplished it in a very able manner. In a volume which occupies but little room, the officer and soldier may here command at a glance the cream of many valuable works, and obtain information on almost any point of interest. This work, indeed, forms for the camp and barracks what Maundrell's 'Treasury of Knowledge' represents in the counting-house; and we cannot doubt that it will obtain corresponding success."—United Service Magazine.

THE ARMIES OF THE GREAT POWERS

By LASCELLES WRAXALL.

The information he (Mr. Wraxall) is able to lay before his readers comes rather opportunely at the present hour, when continental ambassadors are summoned from Paris to attend our Cabinet Councils, and every day we hear louder rumours of a general European war. The information that our author is enabled to lay before his readers, though only, perhaps, an approximation to the truth, is particularly valuable at the present time.—Leader.

No work could possibly be more opportune, or more likely to be in general request at the present moment. Mr. Wraxall does not confine himself, indeed, to a simple Homeric catalogue of the forces each State can bring into the field, although even this would be worth knowing on the brink of a general war. He goes far beyond a dull recital of figures, and comments with an air of easy authority on the peculiar characteristics of Austrians, Prussians, English, French, Sardinians, Russians, and Turks. The author appears, moreover, to speak from personal knowledge and experience. He has seen with his own eyes the troops whose good and bad qualities he impartially describes; and during the Crimean war he enjoyed many opportunities of judging from personal observation of the comparative excellence of the forces warring in the Thracian Chersonese. The result is a most useful and compendious work, at all times interesting, but especially so when the question of peace or war is trembling in the balance. No young officer's kit can be considered complete without this key to the relative homicidal properties of the European Powers.—National Standard.

He has certainly given us an apparently complete and concise analysis of the chief European armies, and so far he is entitled to our thanks and approbation.—Literary Gazette.

A very readable and instructive volume. But better than his opinions are his facts. His description of the Austrian, Russian, Prussian, French, Sardinian, and Turkish armies is exact and interesting. He is also very accurate in his delineation of the composition and details of the British and Anglo-Indian armies.—United Service Gazette.

A more seasonable contribution to current literature than Mr. Lascelles Wraxall's account of "The Armies of the Great Powers" cannot be imagined. In an octavo volume he has condensed all the information every one desires to possess on the subject of the armaments of the great military powers—and he is a most reliable guide. Their means of aggression or defence are set forth clearly and perspicuously, and almost at a glance the general reader is enabled to form a correct idea of the relative chances of success in the event of a protracted war. Not only the numerical strength of each army is given, but also the fullest details of its organisation. The different systems of discipline, the dress and accoutrements, the rewards and punishments, and the general internal economy of the European armies, are described in plain language.—Leeds Times, March 5.

BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH, NEW ROAD, LONDON.—MORISON'S VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE

is the only medicine that strikes at the root of all disease. This has been proved by an experience of thirty years, during which time upwards of 400,000 cases of cure have been effected. The Hygeian agents throughout the world are unanimous upon the Hygeian system of medicine introduced by James Morison. The Hygeist, who not only taught the public how to cure their own ailments, but also rescued the world from the dangers of false medical doctrines. The monument lately raised to his memory, by a penny subscription, sufficiently attests the importance of his discoveries.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS,

a CERTAIN CURE for SCURVY, LEPROSY, and all DISEASES of the SKIN. The heaviness, weariness, and dejection of spirits usually attendant on those who suffer from diseases of the skin, are speedily removed by the use of Holloway's Ointment and Pills. Their efficacy in correcting the bad habit of the body, and in curing complaints of the class above mentioned, stands unrivalled; and in places abroad, where the malady is so prevalent, the cures are wonderful. The purifying properties of the pills, and the peculiar effect the ointment has on the skin, render them superior to any other remedy. In all cutaneous affections these remedies stand unrivalled; and, as a cosmetic, this ointment is in very general repute.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of chemically prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

MR. EPH RAIM MOSELEY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unobtainable; and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This publication stands on quite a different ground from the other monthlies, and affects no rivalry with them. We beg to add our own recommendation to those it has already received. Though the conductors disclaim the idea of filling any vacuum, they certainly do so. They evidently also possess good information, and deal with most of their topics in a serious and searching spirit.—Press, March 5, 1859.

If it proves to be, what from the first number seems likely, a publication appealing more to the higher class of readers, whose wants are at present only supplied by the Quarterly Reviews, its chances of success will certainly be very considerable. There is no conceivable reason why articles written by and addressed to thoughtful men should only make their appearance four times in the twelvemonth, but, on the contrary, every reason to suppose that a monthly collection of such would meet with a ready and extensive sale. The purely political articles are on "Indian Finance" and "Parliament and the People," the last, especially, very ably written.—Globe, March 2, 1859.

First of all, let us bid welcome to the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," published by Messrs. Allen and Co., of 7, Leadenhall-street. It is sought to establish a sort of English "Revue des deux Mondes." This design is strictly carried out.—Literary Gazette, March 5, 1859.

Its articles, which are of a thoroughly miscellaneous character, are promising enough.—John Bull, March 5, 1859.

It is a new monthly magazine, that brings itself modestly into the world without any flaming announcement of the wonders it intends to do. . . . We are very glad to see in the first number a quality which gives it a full title to existence, viz., good sense, as opposed to the ordinary affectation of omniscience, superciliousness, or an unflinching vis comica. . . . We welcome any novelty in literature which promises to be sensible, well-informed, and gentlemanlike. There are several articles of merit in this number. That on "Literature and Life" is perhaps the best. Its remarks on Mr. B. Hope's notion of making literature a profession are perfectly sound. The very clever and much-wanted article against the silliness of our present Christmas pieces for the stage should be read by all who fancy they like going to see such things. The article on "Parliamentary Reform" we have had occasion to notice elsewhere; that on "Indian Finance" deserves attention; and that on "Hallam" is sure to get it without deserving it so much.—Spectator, March 5, 1859.

The first number of a new monthly publication, the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," deserves a cordial welcome. Professedly based upon the plan of the "Revue des deux Mondes," it exhibits much of the scholarly spirit, the freedom and independence of thought, and the thorough geniality of tone, which mark its distinguished prototype. The opening article on "Literature and Life" is remarkable, hitting the case to a nicety, taking the middle course between the reckless Mohockism of Bohemia, and the affected diglve refinement of the Saturday Review. All the articles are excellent; but I would specially point out a well-deserved attack on "Christmas Pieces," a biographical notice of "Hallam," and a review of Owen Meredith's "Wanderer."—Literary Lounger in the Illustrated Times, March 5, 1859.

Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. have just brought out the first number of a monthly periodical, called the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW of Politics, Literature, and Social Science." We confess that until we read this first number we had no very clear impression that we were in need of any addition to our already heavily-laden monthly literature; but a careful examination of the contents of the work has satisfied us that its projectors are justified in the undertaking. If they cannot be said, in the slang of the book-market, to have supplied a want, there is little doubt that they will create an audience. The best brief notion we can give of the publication is to say that it promises to become to the English reader what the Revue des deux Mondes is to the French, with an indefinitely wider latitude of topics and freedom of opinion. The critical element predominates, but it admits of the essay in its pure form, and is sufficiently elastic in both departments to embrace every variety of subject of current or permanent interest. In politics it ranges with the progressive section of the Conservative party, which would preserve the constitution by adapting it from time to time to the necessities of successive epochs. The soundness of its judgment on the question of Parliamentary Reform is displayed in the ablest and most thoroughly constitutional article that has yet appeared in any of our periodicals on the subject—an article which acquires additional value from the fact that it foreshadowed the whole of the scheme of the Government two days before the Reform Bill was brought forward. In social law and morals, the object of the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" will be to note the progress and collect the results of all movements tending towards the advancement or elucidation of those vague philosophical investigations which are clustered under the general head of social science. Good earnest is given of the resources at the command of the writers, and of the practical manner in which they are prepared to deal with them, in an excellent article on the "Homeless Poor." There are also capital papers upon "Russia" and "Indian Finance," and some admirable literary articles. This last department is pervaded by a spirit of independence, and a high scholarly tone, which we trust "custom" may not impair. Let us have at least one English periodical, written with integrity and good taste, to which we may confidently look for fearless and honest opinions. The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" promises to realise those expectations, and we heartily wish it the success which it deserves.—Home News, March 3, 1859.

It may with truth be said of it (the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW"), that the opening number promises well. There is a good healthy, manly tone about it (no small thing), and literary ability of no common order. We heartily wish it success.—Overland Mail, March 8, 1859.

110, REGENT-STREET, and 83, LUDGATE-HILL, Are the Dental Establishments of

MESSRS. GABRIEL, the old-established DENTISTS, Patentees of the System for Insuring Perfect ARTICULATION and MASTICATION, without the impediments usually attendant upon the ordinary plans.

In their IMPROVED MINERAL TEETH and FLEXIBLE GUMS there are no springs or wires, no extraction of roots; the fit is of the most unerring accuracy, while, from the flexibility of the agent employed, pressure upon the gums or remaining teeth is entirely avoided. It is permanent, wholesome, and congenial to the mouth, and, when in use, defies the notice of the closest observer. It is only necessary to see them to be convinced of their superiority; and unless every satisfaction is given, no fee is accepted.

The best materials are used, which Messrs. GABRIEL are enabled to supply at prices lower than are usually charged for common qualities, they having on the premises extensive laboratories for the manufacture of every speciality appertaining to the profession. Consultation gratis. Established 1804; and at 134, Duke-street, Liverpool.

THE OUDE POLICE.

Perhaps the most important question in Oude next to the pacification of the country has been the re-organisation of the police. It was of course perceived from the first that this police must be military, able to suppress slight ementes, to assist in holding down a discontented population. However powerful the European garrison might be, there remained functions which it would have been a waste of power for them to attempt to perform. At the same time, it was necessary that this military police should be also to some extent a civil police, should perform detective functions, and be strictly subordinate to the civil Government. To secure both ends, the Chief Commissioner has relied upon a plan which we are about to describe.

Mr. Montgomery, even before his appointment, seems to have been struck with the superiority of the Scinde police, and it was to that Province rather than to the Punjab that he looked on his appointment for a model. His first act on his arrival was to appoint a chief of police, Major H. Bruce, C.B., who speedily justified the selection. Besides the Punjabee levies imported by the chief commissioner himself, recruiting depots were opened in Oude, and in a few weeks upwards of three thousand men had been collected. The first infantry corps was turned out fully organised and equipped on 4th June, within two months of the issue of final orders. By November the force had increased to 3,004 cavalry and 9,366 infantry, and was ready to take its place as the auxiliary native legion of the Commander in Chief.

At first, of course, its duties were essentially military, a fact most valuable to its future efficiency. The habit of instant implicit obedience which grows up in the field, is as valuable to such a force as the self confidence which follows repeated and successful skirmishing. During the campaign the new instrument proved admirably fitted for its work. Police sowars formed Sir H. Grant's cavalry in the advance on Nuwab Gunge; police corps occupied Fyzabad the instant it had fallen; policemen held the Cawnpore road, and the road on either side of Brigadier Eveleigh. On 11th August Captain Dawson, with a police corps, occupied Sundeela, and throughout September and October the police formed an important section in the expeditionary forces sent into Sundeela and Sultaupore, fighting in one month eight successful skirmishes. In November the Commander in Chief moved forward in earnest, and every district as the troops passed through was occupied by the military police. Three regiments of infantry and one of cavalry were assigned to each division, and to them was entrusted the task of disarming the population and dismantling the forts. Three more regiments and a cavalry regiment followed Lord Clyde across the Gogra, and occupied station after station as the army advanced. Their presence, coming so soon after the great defeat, extinguished every idea of resistance, and there is not an instance of a district once occupied having been again disturbed. The disarmament was carried on with the most determined energy, and it is hoped that in a few weeks a matchlock will be as unprocurable in Oude as a park of artillery.

The military occupation thus complete, it remained to provide for the more important and permanent duties of the new force. In every division there will be one regiment of cavalry, or 600 sabres, of whom one-third will remain at head-quarters as a permanent reserve, the remainder being scattered, fifty to every district station, twenty to every talseel, and eight to every thannah—a distribution which, if wide for purposes of discipline, at least embraces the entire country. One regiment of infantry will in the same way be attached to each district in the division, with similar concentration at head-quarters and distribution in the interior. Each pergunnah is ruled by a native officer selected by merit, and usually from the cavalry. Each district has its own commandant, who is again superintended by the commandant of the division, who is finally responsible to the chief of police. A force therefore numerically smaller than the old array of burkundazes is rendered equally ubiquitous, while it retains the strong organisation and fighting capacity of a brigade.

The duties of the cavalry and infantry are somewhat different. The latter guard treasures and posts, convoy treasure, and watch the prisons. The former are partially detective, being employed to arrest offenders, follow up robbers, and generally to seize all persons pointed out by the civil authorities. Both are strictly subordinate to the civil authority. The commandant is formally ordered, if he deems any requisition from a civil officer beyond the sphere of his duty, to obey first, and remonstrate afterwards through the divisional commandant. Quarrels on duty are thus rendered almost impossible, and time will soon draw the line between the functions of the different classes.

In cities and large stations this police will be further reinforced by a special city police, with a special commandant or kotwal, and with a body of detectives specially selected and trained. The latter will, it is expected, be most valuable, but their value will depend a little too completely upon their honesty for us to put much faith in the experiment. It has, however, we have heard, partially succeeded under Mr. Forjett at Bombay.

The instant a crime occurs in the interior it must be reported to the nearest police chokce by the zemindar, or the party injured. The zemindar may act through the village watchman, but the latter is in no degree responsible. He is simply a tolerated nuisance, and the owner holds his lands on the tenure of giving hearty personal aid to the police. He is willing enough to exercise his authority for his own benefit, and he must exert it for that of the State likewise. The police will receive the complaint, but they are strictly forbidden to receive confessions, or to examine witnesses. They have nothing whatever to do with judicial inquiries, which are left exclusively to the magisterial authority. So also in the case of an accidental death. Inquiry may be made, but the verdict must be pronounced by a jury of respectable householders. So also in all cases of search for stolen property every act must be performed in the presence of respectable neighbours, of the prosecutor, and, invariably, of the ostensible owner of the property. In the event of an affray, the police are not to interfere on one side or the other. They have nothing to do with the right or the wrong of the matter, but to keep the peace, and, if necessary, cut down both sides with summary impartiality.

The system we have described, it will be evident to our readers, is based rather on the English than the Oriental idea of government. The police, though protected by weapons and organisation, as in England by the popular reverence for the law, are absolutely dissociated from the judicial administration. Their business is to apprehend, not to inquire, and far less to decide, and the magistrates are left to their proper functions free from the enjoyments and the cares of thieftaking. The system is the same in all essentials as the one we have for years vainly recommended for Bengal. It is as yet an experiment, but it is at all events a decided advance upon the ancient plan, and we can perceive but two circumstances likely to interfere with its success. The first is the retention of the musket. The weapon among a disarmed population is not required, and tends only to keep up an exaggerated pride in the police. It will, we are told, be removed when the country has settled down, but it should be abolished at once. Three months hence we may not have Mr. Montgomery to rely on, and with returning order the old stupid confidence will inevitably return. It may not then be so easy to alter the accoutrements of a body till then well behaved, and accustomed to regard firearms as a mark of honour. The second point is the existence of the village chowkeedars. These wretches are told in so many words that they are only tolerated, and are not responsible, but they should be deprived of even the semblance of authority. As time advances, and the administration stiffens into routine, the first object of the zemindar in Oude as in Bengal will be to shirk his police responsibilities. The chowkeedar will be pushed forward to bear his master's burdens, and in a few years silly councillors at home will be repeating the worn-out arguments about the last relic of municipal institutions. Mr. Montgomery should abolish the nuisance while he has the power, recognise anybody as the agent of the responsible zemindar, and ignore the institution of village watchmen altogether and for ever.

For the rest the chief commissioner has succeeded in organising a police numerous enough to give us eyes in every village, and almost in every field; strong enough to maintain a newly-conquered province in profound peace; and as little dangerous either to the people or to our rule as an armed native police can hope to become.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TWO LITTLE FACTS.—The Nawab of Banda has been pardoned, and is to receive a pension of Rs. 4,000 a year. This man has been a traitor from the first, has levied armies against us, assisted Tantia Topee, done all that in him lay to erase the very memory of the English name within the range of his authority. Lieutenant Willoughby, brother of the officer who by blowing up the Delhi arsenal struck the keynote of resistance to the rebellion, and bequeathed his name and his family to the Government which has neglected both, was present at the attack on Bulughhur. Single-handed he rushed forward to the gate, and under a heavy fire blew open the lock, a feat acknowledged by the Home Government with the Victoria Cross. In an explosion which followed he was lamed for life, and received internal injuries which render care and rest necessary to his existence. For receiving these wounds he has been deprived of his staff pay as a revenue surveyor, and draws in England the half pay of a lieutenant, a sum insufficient for the bare necessities of life, and his wound pension. The latter instead of being assigned from the date of his wound has been given from the same date of the following year. The Nawab of Banda, therefore, for endeavouring to overthrow the British Government, receives double the sum paid to Lieutenant Willoughby for becoming a cripple in its defence. As for his brother, an acknowledgment of his services seems past hope. The only memorial to his name is a tablet in the Bath Abbey Church, put up by his relatives. The inscription below is the phrase, "blessed is the servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." The text, "put not your trust in princes," would have been a truer description of his fate, a more forcible warning to those who would imitate his self-devotion.—Friend of India.

THE BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION, in a paper reviewing Sir G. Clerk's memorandum on Indian education, remark that the popular belief as to a deliberate design to interfere with their religion is, to "a great extent," incorrect. They consider the true want of India to be education of a higher class, education which shall make men. It is to the existence of this education that they attribute the superiority exhibited by the natives of the metropolis. The remark is a singular instance of the petitio principii. Europeans, and all natives in the Mofussil, consider the natives of the metropolis the very worst in India.

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING.—A correspondent of the Englishman wants the red letter days of the English calendar to be made holidays by law. Why not make a general rule that everybody should have a holiday every week extending from Monday to Saturday, and receive full pay all the time? As it is, Government gives sixty days a year besides Sundays; a less equivalent to an income tax of two shillings in the pound. A tax of that amount would make Calcutta scream, but the merchants will throw the sum away by idleness without a murmur.

THE "SUTLEY."—The committee appointed to inquire into the cause of the fire on board the Sutley report: "After a careful consideration of the evidence before us, we are of opinion that the destruction of the late ship Sutley by fire originated in the igniting of the jute in the after hold, but we have no evidence to prove the direct cause that produced the fire. There appears to have been great carelessness in carrying naked lights into the hold amongst the jute, which was done immediately before the fire was discovered." It seems certain that the jute did not take fire spontaneously, as at first imagined.

CIVIL FURLONGS.—A notification, dated Jan. 26, announces that the restrictions on civil furlough have been modified. Fifty-one furloughs are due, but to avoid inconvenience to the public service, only twenty-three will be given, thirteen of them to the North-West. Of the total number, eleven will be given to applicants before March 1 in order of seniority, and the remainder to officers whose services have earned the privilege. Furloughs for military officers will also, we presume, speedily be opened.

INSUFFICIENT PENALTIES.—The Englishman states that fines have been levied on some of the rebellious cities of the North West. Bareilly is to pay Rs. 25,000; Juanpore, Rs. 28,000; Shah-jehanpore, Rs. 12,000. There is something exceedingly undignified in these trumphy fines. If intended as a punishment, the fine should have amounted to at least three years' rental.

VIRTUE ITS OWN REWARD.—We (Friend of India) published, in July last, an article describing the services performed by Captain Tuffuzool Hoossein in Nagpore. It is not too much to say that his influence saved the province. He was promised reward, but his services were not even acknowledged. Our notice of the case elicited an official letter from the Governor General, but nothing was done. Tuffuzool Hoossein is still a conspicuous example of the truth, that virtue is its own reward.

BLESSINGS OF TAXATION.—Mr. Barry, of Serajunge, in a pamphlet on Assam, once more starts the theory that the people are too lightly taxed. He believes if the taxes were heavier, the people would work harder to pay them. That is the idea of the American Missionaries in Burmah, and the plan by which Dr. Mogling proposes to secure the regeneration of Coorg. It is also the advice given by Lord Grey to the Governors of the West India Islands, who are worried by the innate idleness of the negro population. According to experience, very high taxation is only beneficial when it can be avoided. The peasantry of France, the most severely taxed class in Europe, are drowned in debt, and do not improve. The English artisans, who, so long as they consume no luxuries, are as untaxed as nomads, are, next to the Chinese, the most industrious of the human race.

AN INGENIOUS PLEA.—A case of some importance to Hindoos has recently been decided in the Sudder Court. A rich Hindoo dying, left two childless widows. One took all the property. The other claimed her share. The possessor defended her exclusive right on the ground that her rival had been unfaithful to her husband, and divorced by him. Plaintiff pleaded Act 21 of 1850, as protecting her from the consequences of her crime. The Sudder Court held that it protected her only from the consequences of loss of caste incurred by a change in religion.

MR. PLUMB.—The directors of the Bank of Bengal recommend, we perceive, a pension of £500 a-year to their secretary, Mr. Plumb.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—The Punjabee states that Sir John Lawrence has condemned the public works department of that presidency in no measured terms. The system, he says, is at once wasteful and inefficient, the accounts are confused, and there is no possibility of keeping up a substantial control. The bridges do not stand a second rainy season, and the roads are perpetually wanting repair. The Lieutenant-Governor, therefore, advises that an engineer officer should be appointed private secretary.

THE ROYAL PROCLAMATION.—The Englishman publishes a letter addressed by the Governor General to the Governments of Bombay and the Punjab. His Lordship declares that the term British subject includes natives, but adds that a difference must be made between murders the result of old feuds, and wilful and causeless murders, such as those of Europeans. He considers also that the fact of a sepoy being present in the ranks of a regiment which murdered its officers is not proof that he "directly" participated in murder. We question if the proclamation was intended to be thus construed like an Act of Parliament, and whether, had it contained an order for sparing the people and hunting the sepoys, it would have been so distinctly obeyed. Villages are not to be fined for the murder of Europeans, but may be compelled to rebuild Government buildings! A general revision of sentences on traitors is also to take place, but not yet. The regulation about the villages is a strange one. Are bricks more valuable than human lives?

RETROGRADE STEPS.—We (Englishman) hear that the honorary magistracies are to be abolished at the commencement of the ensuing month, it is said, under orders from home, not by the Lieutenant Governor, who is satisfied that they have worked well. The reason alleged for this retrograde movement is, that it makes an invidious distinction between Europeans and natives. It is true that these functionaries have been selected from the European settlers, but that is no reason why, if the system were extended, that native gentlemen should not also be appointed. But it is said they are unfit for the office. Surely if they are fit to be stipendiaries, they are equally fit for gratuitous service, and the number of those now employed in Lower Bengal is far greater than that of the unpaid Europeans. On the other hand, if the native residents in the Mofussil, not specially trained to such employment, are unfit for it, then the distinction is not invidious. If the Government finds a certain number of persons, able and willing to undertake the labour of the magistracy gratuitously, surely it is unnecessary to inquire where they were born, if they are proved to possess knowledge and character which qualify them for the office. The want of an efficient magistracy has long been pointed out as a great evil, and the excuse always made was, that a greater number could not be afforded. Now an example is taken from English practice, it is partially tried and found to give satisfaction in the country, and to contribute powerfully to its peace and security. If extended, it would afford direct relief to our impoverished treasury in the shape of salaries, and indirectly by increasing the external trade and wealth of the country in proportion to the additional security afforded.

LUCKNOW.—A letter from Lucknow states the work for the new cantonment is already commenced. It is S.E. of Lucknow on a natural ridge, commanding the country on both sides of the Goomtee, and from its position is expected to prove healthy, as there is a natural watershed on both sides for drainage. The new military police commenced their duties on the 20th, and the district commandant is responsible for the peace of the division. Many thousands of labourers find employment here for the present, and as it is said to be the chief commissioner's intention to repair all the principal lines of roads, and open out new ones between the stations, large numbers of the disbanded soldiery may be thus provided with labour and food. A railroad to Cawnpore is also said to be in contemplation.

MOOLTAN, January 20.—You may perhaps like to know something of the steamers plying on this river. There are four at present; the Havelock, the Laurence, the Frere, and the Outram. They each take flats, which are lashed alongside, and not at the stern, as some in your rivers are. The power of each vessel is 120 horse. The voyage from Kurrachee to Mooltan sometimes takes as much as thirty days, the stoppages at the several stations being long, and in my opinion, sometimes unnecessarily so. The downward passage is shorter, but still longer than it ought to be. The distance from Mooltan to Kurrachee is only 800 miles, and the Indus is a swift flowing stream. It is not like the Ganges, full of shallows, and ever-changing sand-banks, which make the passage of that river so tedious and hazardous in the dry season. It is all very well at the present moment, when there is such a demand for freight by the steamers on the part of Government, for the commanders to be so independent to passengers and the trading community. But this time will not last for ever, and then must the very heavy prices charged at the present day for passage and diet on board of the steamers come down, and we may, I suppose, anticipate that in a couple of years Mooltan will become a much better known station to the dwellers in the Punjab than it is now.—New Times.

AGRA, Jan. 25.—The camel corps, under command of Lieutenant colonel Ross, marched into Agra on Sunday morning. Head quarters of H. M.'s 64th regiment, under command of Lieutenant colonel Bingham, C.B., marched into Agra on Monday, and moved into barracks this afternoon. The left wing 3rd European regiment, under command of Captain Ross, marched towards Gwalior this morning, giving escort to 10 lacs of Rupees. The head-quarter squadron H. M.'s 6th dragoon guards carabineers were at Futehghur on the 23rd, and may be expected here about the 1st proximo. The detachments of H. M.'s 64th at Merun-ke-Serai and Mynpoorie have received orders to join their head quarters here, the former detachment has commenced its march, and will pick up the Mynpoorie detachment. The left wing 3rd battalion rifle brigade, will arrive here on the 30th instant, when the head quarters of the 3rd European regiment will march for Gwalior, leaving a depot of women and children here.—Delhi Gazette.

CALCUTTA.—The Hurkaru complains that all the expenses of living in Calcutta are increasing. House rent is higher; servants demand larger wages; food is dearer, and the cost of keeping horses is becoming excessive. Calcutta in fact is rapidly becoming one of the most expensive capitals in the world, perhaps, if we except London and Paris, the most expensive. Matters will become worse yet, particularly in house rent. There is no land left to build on, unless speculators can make an inroad into the native town.

MR. ROBERT SPANKIE, C. S.—The Delhi Gazette, writing on honours for civil officers, mentions Mr. Spankie, the magistrate of Selahunpore. The name of this gentleman has not been brought sufficiently before the public. He has made the uncommon mistake of doing his work too well. His energy and courage have prevented the spread of the revolt to his own district, and he is therefore unnoticed.

MR. W. TAYLER, late Commissioner of the Patna division, and latterly Judge of Mymensing, has been suspended from his office for publishing, from time to time in the newspapers, a refutation of the charges brought against him by Mr. Halliday and his coadjutors, although Mr. Tayler had received the permission of the President in Council. Mr. Halliday found no scruples in framing his charges against Mr. Tayler, nor in appealing to public opinion by their publication. The Supreme Council, therefore, felt that it was no more than justice to Mr. Tayler to permit the publication of his defence.

THE EX-KING OF OUDE has received intimation that he will be released in a short time. The premises in Garden Reach are undergoing thorough repairs and alterations, preparatory to the return of his Majesty.

MUSSOORIE, Jan. 23.—Although the winter is not half over, the weather has been so mild that the rhododendrons have anticipated the spring by a month and a half, and are all bursting into blossom. From the unseasonableness of the weather, some expect a severe and stormy February. Some European deserters from Nynnee Tal are reported coming this way, and a picket to arrest them has been placed in Landour bazaar for some days past.

Too ENERGETIC.—It having been reported to Government that Capt. Sneyd, Commandant of the Chandree Police, put to death three men charged with rebellion, the Governor General has ordered that Capt. Sneyd be immediately relieved of his command, and that under no circumstances is he to exercise any authority whatever after this order.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—Mr. Hogg, the superintendent of the Eastern Bengal Railway Company; Mr. Purdon, the chief engineer; Mr. Ainslie, the commissioner, and Capt. E. Davidson, Deputy consulting engineer to the Government of India, are now occupied in surveying the country through which the rail will pass. The line, as far as Barrackpore, will be open by September next.

MILITARY AUDITOR-GENERAL.—On the retirement of Colonel Champey, it is reported that Major Hill, the paymaster of the presidency division, or Lieutenant colonel Hanington, commanding the 63rd Regiment N.I., will be appointed military auditor general. The latter officer is a first-rate actuary.

JEYPORE.—This is a most magnificent city; certainly the finest I have seen in Asia. Nothing in Constantinople, Damascus, Aleppo or Cairo, can come near it. I had not the slightest idea there was such a place in India. Streets eighty feet wide, with palaces, temples, gilded domes, and porticos. All the fantastic glitter of Hindoo architecture meets the eye at every turn. The view at the "Chowki" is really imposing, indeed I do not recollect having seen anything like it even in Europe. Everything is in good repair. People seem to be rolling in wealth. Gardens and country palaces dot the surrounding country on all sides—the Raja's, at a place called Amba, being of Alhambrian magnificence. Gaudy peacocks spread their golden feathers to the morning sun in every direction; in short, the scene is almost fairy-like. We have been here now three days, and march to-morrow. The amount of game is perfectly fabulous. Killed two pigs within half a mile of the camp this evening—but your patience must be oozing fast, so adieu.—Bombay Standard.

FREIGHTS.

To London, 22. 5s. to 23. 7s. 6d. (all round).

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Feb. 8).—Transactions have not been extensive; although there has been a desire to operate, they have been restrained by the high prices at which most of the principal articles of produce are held. The season for Indigo is drawing to a close, a great portion being already out of the market; the quantity now remaining is of a mixed quality. Raw Silk.—A great disposition is shown to operate, but the advanced value influenced by light stocks prevents free operation. Corals may also be reported in similar position, but stocks are large, of mostly indifferent qualities. Sugar has been engaged to a small extent; but prices of most descriptions have been well maintained. Saltpeetre has also been in limited operation. Rice has been largely engaged for Australia, but to a very moderate extent for Europe. Linseed has been almost neglected for Britain. Rapeseed has been in moderate inquiry. Jute has been in animated demand for Great Britain, which has caused a rise in price. Hides have not engaged much inquiry. Stocks and supplies being of light descriptions, all other descriptions of exportable produce have engaged but little inquiry.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Feb. 8).—There has not been general activity in the market since last mail, owing to advances from the Upper Provinces not being very favourable. Buyers have been rather cautious in their operations, and have attempted to lower the market to some extent, as they feared the late extreme prices might influence heavy shipments from home; but the late advanced prices at home have induced holders to be firm in their demand, and prices, which had gone down a little, have again recovered nearly to their former position. Buyers at present evince no great desire to secure parcels to arrive, and sales of Grey Goods lately have not been so extensive. In bleached goods, Shirtings, both plain and figured, have been in fair request by the Moguls; Cambrics are selling slowly, with very small available stocks. Jacquenets in moderate demand for local requirement. Tricots selling at former prices. Lappets without fall in price; but some slack in second hands have caused dealers to be slack in their purchase. Mulls engage the attention of the Afghans. Prints and Turkey Red Goods are going out of season, and are falling in price. Woollens are quite neglected. Metals are almost in their former position; sales are only for local requirement.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.—The Madras Chamber of Commerce, it seems, has recommended that the Government of India should adopt the English weights and measures as the standard for the empire. Nothing can be more preposterous than the existing system. Every zillah has a different measure for the maund, and almost every one for the beegah. The easiest reform, however, would be a system based, not on the English standard, but on a rupee. Let the weight of the rupee be the unit of weight, its diameter the unit of measure, and we may be sure of native concurrence. Measures of capacity are not wanted. You can sell a pound of water or of oil just as easily as a pint.

A GALLANT YOUTH.—It is with much pleasure that we (Madras Athenaeum) record the gallant deeds of one of the sons of our respected chief engineer, Colonel Faber. Many in Madras will remember the young, good-looking cornet, not very long ago learning his drill in the body guard lines. He has now grown into a stalwart man, some six feet two, and of strength proportioned to his make. Opportunity of distinction, which many men wait for till they are grey, has come to Lieut. Faber early in life, nor has he missed the occasion. We learn from the Delhi Gazette that a small body of the Madras 6th cav. under his gallant leading has recently done right good service in the disturbed districts. On one occasion Lieut. Faber disposed of no fewer than three antagonists in hand to hand encounter; the first he cut down, the second severed his sword, but with the remainder of the blade he nearly cut the rebel's head from his shoulders, the third he brought down with his pistol. On another occasion we hear of his killing a chieftain in single combat; and though his own modesty has prevented the young hero writing of his own prowess to his friends, it is good to record such acts of daring and duty, even though the performer is forced to "blush to find it fame."

BOMBAY RAILWAY.—An official statement of the half-yearly receipts of the Bombay Railway shows that the line has earned Rs. 5-10 per cent. for the half year. The principal receipts are from the carriage of goods, 40 per cent. being from fire-wood alone. It is proposed to reduce the charges on more expensive articles, which are now driven to other modes of transit.

THE ORIENTAL STEAM COMPANY'S flotilla has arrived at Kurrachee. The vessels are accompanied by sixty mechanics, and will be put together at once. These are the jointed steamers, which are to ply between Kurrachee and Mooltan.

NATIVE LIFE IN BOMBAY.—A recent libel action in Bombay gives a curious glimpse of the interior of native society, and the practical working of caste. There is a paper, it appears, published at that Presidency called the Chabook (the whip). It seems to be something like what the London Satirist was before the clever scamp who edited that paper was extinguished by the Duke of Brunswick. The Chabook, like such productions everywhere, did not pay, and the editor in distress applied to various acquaintances for relief. Among other persons he applied to Lutchmedass Khemjee, a cotton dealer of Bombay, and a general merchant of some standing. He asked him first for some cotton clothes, and then for a loan of Rs. 200, necessary, he said, to save his honour. "I am," he continues:—

"I am a talented friend; therefore try me once. Should you try me day and night by putting me to the test, you will learn who I am, and what are my merits. I am not willing to see and meet foolish and extravagant, dissolute and vicious people, however wealthy they may be, and even if I could gain thousands of rupees. But if I sit and associate day and night with persons like you, wise, moral, philanthropic, and pious, whose object is no other than of benefitting their countrymen, whose attention is occupied with thoughts of leaving behind them meritorious works and good names upon this earth, I shall thereby benefit the world as well as my friends. I am desirous of being admitted into your company, so that we may have opportunities to consult during the day about my interests, and in the evening about the welfare of the world."

The naivete with which the writer estimates the importance of his own affairs, and those of the world, is delicious in these days of universal philanthropy. Lutchmedass, however, did not quite see the request in the same light as the editor. He seems scarcely to have been enchanted with the prospect of being talked to all day, and all night; had even, one fancies, an idea that the process might be ennuyant. At all events, he sent in his bill, and as it was not paid, went to law. The editor vowed revenge, and calculated apparently what charge would most deeply wound the man who had scorned his conversation, and demanded payment for his clothes. In Europe a man of the class would probably accuse his enemy of ugliness, or insinuate doubts as to his solvency, or rake up stories about his female relatives. The Bombay satirist was more subtle. With a venomous acumen for which English literature affords, we are happy to say, few parallels, he accused his creditor of having once on a time slandered a clergyman! Lutchmedass is a Bhatia, a man of a sect who believe that Vishnu is always present with their Moharajes. To slander the Moharajes was therefore a crime of the deepest dye. The caste was in an uproar. Two hundred Setts met, and agreed that Lutchmedass ought to be killed, or at all events excommunicated. The newspaper was sent to Cutch, and Lutchmedass found himself abhorred in his own land. He was, to use his own language, "vilified, derided, scorned, abused, and threatened." He was, however, rich. His friends after the first explosion managed to obtain a hearing, and sentence of excommunication was suspended, pending the trial of an action for libel. It was brought, and in spite of a clever defence, based on the theory that Lutchmedass was only accused of want of moral courage, the judge found a verdict for the unhappy Khemjee. Damages, Rs. 600, with costs. The merchant left the court in triumph, certainly free from excommunication, and probably with no additional reverence for Moharajes. Englishmen can scarcely conceive a state of society in which the bare accusation of speaking disrespectfully of a priesthood should under a free Government be almost a sentence of death. Yet it is not four hundred years since we were ourselves in the same condition. In 1489, to accuse a man of slandering the priesthood was to condemn him as an infidel, as a wretch fit only to be burned. Henry the Seventh burned Lollards on lighter accusations than those of the editor of the Chabook, and with the full approbation of the majority of Englishmen. There is hope then even for Bhatias, hope perhaps even of a day when to abuse the clergy of the caste shall be considered the highest mark of esprit and enlightenment!—Friend of India.

BOMBAY AND SUEZ ROUTE.—A new steamer, the Northam, has been placed on the mail route between Bombay and Suez. She is a new vessel, a screw, of 1,600 tons burthen. The Bombay route is rapidly becoming the popular one with the North-west, and will soon want larger steamers. This year several passages have been taken from Calcutta.

PRIZE MONEY.—The Bombay Standard calls attention to the long delay in the distribution of Indian prize money. Delhi has been taken fifteen months, and Lucknow one year, yet nothing has been heard of the prize money. The prize money of Dhar was promised by Colonel Durand to the troops, but it has not been given, and the very existence of the Jhansee prize is disputed. If we are not misinformed, also, very large sums indeed should be distributed among General Whitlock's force. We have heard, on good authority, that their share will greatly exceed that of any brigade employed in India.

THE BURNS CENTENARY.—The proposed festival at Bombay in honour of the centenary of Burns has failed. The subscribers were very few, and the stewards have returned the money paid. A similar festival in Scotland will, it is said, be very numerously attended by the first names in the land. The Bombay meeting appears to have broken down, from the high price of the tickets, Rs. 20 each.

ELBOW ROOM.—The Bombay journals are earnestly petitioning for "more room" for their city. The European town is within the Fort, and they argue that the walls should be destroyed. It seems that the local Government is favourable to the plan, and the Court did not oppose out of any regard for the fortifications as such. They believed, however, that the removal of the walls would reduce the value of property within them. After much study we fail altogether to comprehend the plan of Bombay. What prevents the citizens from building outside the walls if they like?

A HUMANE SAINT.—A Bombay paper gives a long and graphic account of an accident that occurred at Dhobee Talao on the 17th Jan. It appears that a Parsee woman, whilst drawing water from a well, accidentally fell in, and had sunk twice ere assistance arrived from one of the adjacent houses. She fortunately grasped the end of a rope that was flung to her, and four persons descended to her assistance, as she became insensible. After half an hour's delay a chair was procured, and all were safely drawn to the surface. The said Mahomedan saint who is said to guard the well was duly praised, and it was asserted that the woman was seen to be buoyed up on the surface. The next morning the man who flung the rope and his wife both declared they saw a human form, dressed in white, reposing on the surface. The well has been sacred for years, and Parsee women deck its walls with flowers, and sacrifice hens to the resident spirit, so it will lose none of its reputation, but rather gain by the accident.

THE HEAD-QUARTERS of H.M.'s 4th (the King's Own) Regiment, numbering about 472 non-commissioned officers and men, 23 sergeants, 13 drummers, 47 women, 72 children, and 25 officers, with their families, in charge of Col. T. Williams, which arrived in Bombay from Mauritius by the ship Great Tasmania, Captain John Gardyne, on the 4th of January, embarked on the 27th on board H.M.'s steamers Feroze and Berenice for Tankaria, en route to Guzerat.

AHMEDNUGGUR.—THE LATE MR. SPIERS.—We regret very much to have to announce the death, at Ahmednuggur, on the 19th Jan., from brain fever, of Mr. James Randolph Spiers, the district deputy collector and magistrate of that place, at the early age of twenty-eight years. The deceased gentleman left Poona on the evening of Tuesday, the 11th, to join his appointment at Ahmednuggur. He was attacked with fever and ague at Seroor, and was detained there in consequence for three days without medical assistance of any kind, and on the 15th he reached Nuggur. He rallied a little after his arrival at that place, but on the 18th the fever returned with greater violence than ever, delirium ensued, and the unfortunate sufferer succumbed on the following day. It is gratifying to learn that every attention was paid to him at Nuggur during his illness by the only officials then at the station, namely, the Nazir, the head clerk of the Adawlut, the foujdar, a moonsiff named Wittoba Dhannaskur, and the principal Sudder Ameen. After his death his body was brought into Poona by his brother, and interred on the evening of the 20th. Mr. Spiers had for some months past acted as hoozoor deputy magistrate of Ahmedabad during Mr. Jordan's absence on furlough in England, and had rendered himself very popular with the natives of that place in his official capacity. He was a young man of great ability, and performed his duties with zeal, energy, and the strictest impartiality. By his death the Government has lost a good and faithful servant, and the community to which he belonged a warm friend and consistent supporter of the claims of the uncovenanted service.—Poona Observer.

TANTIA TOPEE OUTWITTED.—There is a curious story about Tantia Topee told in a vernacular newspaper, the Soobhachintuck, published in Sattara. It is said that the Kotwal of Oomrawuttee has found out two persons who have been concerned in the present disturbances. They are of Marathee caste, and have in their possession property of the value of about sixty thousand rupees. From inquiries instituted as to how they got possession of so large a sum, it appears that Tantia Topee deposited it with them, with the intention of engaging the people of Roheensee and Southern Mahratta country in his cause. His usual luck, however, failed him in this instance, and he has lost his money without obtaining the adherents he coveted.

KURRACHEE.—The following have been the traffic arrivals from Kandahar and Kelat during the week ending Jan. 27:—401 camels, 6 horses, 17 donkeys, 163 men. The loads brought in by these animals consisted of wool, kismis, and other spices. Wool continues in great demand, but prices are not so favourable as they were a short time back. The demand for horses on account of Government has not abated, and prices fluctuate. A few more Kafilas are on their way, and may shortly be expected.

lon. Neither Adam's Peak nor any of the other higher mountains of Ceylon, however, is situated in the Southern Province. It abounds in rivers and rice-fields, and the scene of most of the remaining sugar cultivation in Ceylon. The restoration of the Orobokke Dam now in progress will be a great and useful work. The population of the Southern Province is 304,003, spread over an area of 2,147 miles, the rate per square mile being 142, almost equal to the density of population in the Western Province. The road from Galle to Colombo, seventy-two miles, passes almost all the way through a belt of cocoa-nuts. A coach runs daily to Colombo, and thence a coach runs seventy-two more miles up to Kandy, whence the traveller can find his way into the various coffee districts, most of which lie within reach of the mountain capital. A coach, which is to run from Colombo to Negombo from the 1st of January, will carry the traveller to the neighbourhood of the principal European cocoa-nut plantations in the Western and North Western Provinces; while the steamer Pearl when she is repaired will, no doubt, again render access facile to the more extended cocoa-nut plantations of Jaffna and Batticaloa. Cinnamon can be seen nowhere in such perfection as in the beautiful and well roaded cinnamon gardens of Colombo. By far the larger portion of the population of Ceylon are engaged in agriculture. But as yet they grow only two thirds of the rice consumed in the colony. Those engaged in manufactures are chiefly arrack distillers, oil makers, who use the native bullock Chekko, weavers, potters, carpenters, masons, &c. A goodly number of the people now find employment in connection with the European establishments for the preparation of coffee and the manufacture of oil. Cask-making has largely developed with the increase in the exports of coffee, until now there seems some danger of the available timber being exhausted. The larger portion of the timber used in Colombo is obtained in the forests of the Eastern Province, chiefly in the neighbourhood of Batticaloa. For the railway, timber is to be imported from Western Australia. The constituents of our population, viewed with regard to race, would seem to be that the Singhalese proper (including the Kandians who differ only as mountaineers everywhere differ from dwellers in the plain), are about 1,100,000 in number. The Tamils, descendants of conquerors or immigrants from Southern India, amount, probably, to 500,000, four-fifths of whom reside in the Northern and Eastern Provinces. The Moormen, descendants and proselytes of some Arabian fugitives, who reached Southern India about 1,000 years ago, are about 100,000 in number. A large proportion of them are shopkeepers or pedlars. They are the "engirdled figures" who, when the stranger lands in Ceylon, for which they are ready enough to palm off "Brummagen" glass on the uninitiated. A few thousand of the aboriginal Veddahs exist on the borders of the Eastern and Central Provinces; the Ceylon Rifle regiment is composed of Malays; there are a few Kaffirs, the remains of former Ceylon regiments; and in the towns there are a few Parsees and Chinese. The "White" population, including military, and including also the "burghers" of all classes, seem to be about 6,500. The strictly European class, men, women, and children, of this number, would seem to be about 2,500. The military are about 1,500, of whom 1,250 are officers and soldiers, and 250 women and children. Public servants, their wives and families, are about 250 in number, 150 being adult males. The planters, merchants, &c., with their wives and families, are about 850, of whom 650 at least are adult males. So that, out of the whole European population of 2,500, about 2,000 are adult males. Of the 4,000 burghers in the island, the sexes appear to be in equal proportions. Although Christianity comparatively has made considerably more progress in Ceylon than in Continental India, yet the mass of the people are still idolaters. The bulk of the Cinghalese are Buddhists or demon worshippers; the Tamils worship the Hindoo idols, while the Moormen and Malays are Mahomedans. The few Parsees are fireworshippers. The professors of Christianity of all classes are under 150,000. The Roman Catholics claim 150,000 adherents, but we should think this is far above the mark. We should think 100,000 nearer the number. They concede 40,000 to the Protestants, and we suspect this is beyond the utmost limit. Of the Europeans, including military, we suppose about one-half profess to be Episcopalians, say 1,250. The others may be about equally divided between the Roman Catholics and the Presbyterians, for, be it remembered that a large proportion of the coffee planters are Scotch Presbyterians, while a good number of the soldiery are Roman Catholics. Of the 4,000 burghers on the other hand, we suppose that more than one-half belong to the Dutch Presbyterian Church, while a good many are Roman Catholics and a few are Wesleyans and Baptists. Of the 6,500 Europeans and burghers then, we may suppose that about 3,000 are Episcopalians; 2,250 Presbyterians; 900 Roman Catholics, and 450 Wesleyans and Baptists. Of the native adherents of Protestant missions, we have reliable statistics from which we gather that the natives attached to the various Protestant missions are about 24,400. Attached to the Church Mission are 7,800; Propagation Society, 3,000; Wesleyan Mission, 8,500; American Mission, 2,800; Baptist Mission, 2,000. The Americans are either Presbyterians or Congregationalists. Looking, therefore at the above figures, it would appear that out of the 1,700,000 inhabitants of Ceylon, 130,000 profess Christianity: viz:—

Heed to her bosom's jewell'd store;"

Roman Catholics of all classes	100,000
Protestants, do., viz:—
Episcopalians ... ..	13,900
Presbyterians and Congregationalists ... ..	5,200
Wesleyans ... ..	8,700
Baptists ... ..	2,200
Total Christians ... ..	130,000
Of whom 2,500 are Europeans; 4,000 burghers; and the remaining 123,500 natives.
The professedly Protestant portion of the Christian population may be taken in round numbers at:—
Natives ... ..	25,000
Burghers ... ..	3,100
Europeans ... ..	1,900
	30,000
This would leave to the Roman Catholics:—
Natives ... ..	98,500
Burghers ... ..	900
	100,000

Having exhausted our space in dealing with the population of the island, we must reserve for another occasion remarks on the revenue collected from this population, and the charges to which that revenue has been subjected in the various periods to which our figures refer.—Colombo Observer.

MISCELLANEOUS

COLOMBO, Feb. 14.—Notwithstanding the unpropitious weather, the preparers and shippers of coffee have been hard at work. During the fortnight the exports have been as follows:—Six vessels to London have taken 33,967 cwts. plantation, and 5,002 native; and four vessels, destined respectively for Falmouth, Marseilles, Rotterdam, and Akyab, took 11,551 plantation, and 13,937 native. The total for the fortnight is 64,457 cwts.; of which 45,518 was plantation, and 18,939 native. A considerable quantity of coconut oil, and some cinnamon have also gone forward. Of general news there is not much of interest to record. The Governor is on his tour, and was last heard of by the public at Hambantotte, to the inhabitants of which place he stated that he hoped the Orobokke dam would be finished in three months, and that Mr. Harrison would then probably turn his attention to the restoration of the Tissa Maha Rama tank.

Notwithstanding an unexpected scarcity of labour, the railway works are progressing, and no doubt is felt that the first section to Ambepusse will be finished within the three years.

On the departure of Sir Charles MacCarthy and Mr. W. Morris for England, there will be numerous changes in the Service. Mr. Gibson is to act as Colonial Secretary; Major Skinner as Auditor General; and Mr. Smedley as Government Agent of Trincomalie. Some appointment must be made to the District Court of Kandy, Mr. Lavalliere's health having completely given way. Mr. Bailey, Assistant Colonial Secretary, returned to the colony by last steamer from Suez.—Overland Observer.

IMMIGRATION AGENT.—Capt. Graham is to proceed at once to Madura, which is to be his head quarters. His salary is to be £1,000 a year, with, we presume, travelling expenses; but no expense for depots is to be incurred until the decision of the Home Government is obtained.

DR. ELLIOTT.—The Colombo Observer reports the retirement of Dr. Elliott, so long the editor and proprietor of that journal. Dr. Elliott was little known in India until the rebellion, when his determined resistance to the policy of Lord Torrington, whom he finally drove from the island, brought him prominently before the Indian public. He leaves his chair respected by all classes in Ceylon.

SALES OF COFFEE PROPERTY.—Dr. Shipton has sold his estate, Sinnepetia, within two miles of Gampola, for £7,200. The property embraced 110 acres of coffee, and seventy acres of Chena. Atherton and the Burn, two estates in Ambegama, on the other hand, have realised, as was stated at the sale, only what the jungle cost fourteen years ago. Atherton consisted of 300 acres of coffee in full bearing, and realised only £1,100. The Burn, with 225 acres of coffee, and 200 acres of forest, fetched only £1,130.

THE GAZETTE.—The following appointments are notified:—W. H. Halliley, Esq., Acting Assistant Government Agent, at Trincomalie; date 1st February, 1859. Justices of the Peace:—William T. Doyme, Esq., for the Central, Western, and North-Western Provinces. Samuel Jayetilleke, Esq., for the District of Korneegalle. Mr. Alfred Wise has been provisionally nominated, and is recognised as Prussian Consul at Colombo.

CENTRAL ASIA.

Our advices from Cabul are from the 4th to the 16th January:—

"On the 4th, a petition was received from the Sirdars of Bajore, representing that, if the Dost would send a force under Sirdar Peer Mahomed Khan or Sirdar Bhao Khan, they would restore the country of Bajore from Ameer Khan, the Governor of that place, to the Dost. The Ameer ordered Sirdar Bhao Khan to send a confidential agent to Bajore, to ascertain the truth of this statement, and report that there is no intrigue. On the 5th, a letter was received from Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan, informing the Dost that Taj Mahomed Khan, son of Gholam Mahomed Khan, had run away from Kooroom, and was going to Peshawur. The Dost was very angry, and told Gholam Mahomed Khan that it was no fault of his. On the 6th, the Sirdars of Sunko-Khail represented, through Nazir Naeem Khan, that if the Ameer did not send troops against them, they would pay up the arrears of revenue; the Dost bestowed Khilluts on them, and deputed Nazir Naeem Khan with them to bring the revenue from them. On the 8th, Sirdar Sooltan Mahomed Khan and his sons arrived in Jellalabad, and the Dost received them with honour. On the 9th, the Ameer received two churkhs (zebras) from Balkh, which were sent off to Peshawur for Major Lumsden. On the 11th, Sirdar Sultan Mahomed Khan having left the garden of Sirdar Gholam Hyder Khan, encamped at the fort of Sirdar Peer Mahomed Khan. Some Syuds of the Muzrah tribe represented to the Ameer that the people of Sunko-Khail were making daily depredations at night, and had lately robbed them of some cattle and killed one of their party. The Ameer said that he will soon summon their mulliks and punish them. On the 12th, Shah Muruv Khan arrived at Jellalabad from Peshawur, and represented that the treasure will arrive to-morrow, and the muskets the day after; but that the British authorities at Peshawur had given no caps for the muskets. The Ameer said that muskets without caps are of no use, therefore ordered that a letter be sent to the British, requesting them to send caps for the muskets, as they were not procurable in his country. On the 13th, at about five, the treasure from Peshawur arrived, and the Ameer gave charge of the same to Nazir Mahomed Naem Khan. On the 14th, Sirdar Mahomed Ameer Khan arrived from Cabul, and the Ameer inquired why Sirdar Wully Mahomed Khan had not come; he replied that he will leave Cabul on Friday. On the 15th, a petition was received from Sirdar Mahomed Uslum Khan from Seeghan, informing the Ameer that he was proceeding to Balkh with his forces. On the 16th, the muskets arrived at Jellalabad, and were made over to Nazir Mahomed Naem Khan. Sirdar Mahomed Oosman Khan also arrived the same day, and encamped near the garden of Wuzeer Mahomed Ukkur Khan. At five o'clock the Ameer sent Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan and Sirdar Peer Mahomed Khan to Sirdar Mahomed Oosman Khan, to hold some consultation, but the nature of it is not yet known. It is conjectured that it is intended to send forces to some place not yet known.—Lahore Chronicle.

JAVA.

The great expedition against Boni has sailed. No fewer than twenty-six transports are employed. In Palembang an attack by the Dutch on a rebel post had failed, with great loss—three officers being amongst the wounded. The rule of Holland is spreading over the Javan Archipelago.

LADY HAVELOCK AND THE VETERANS OF 13TH REGIMENT.—Lady Havelock has been lately staying at Westfield Cottage, Bath, and hearing that a few non-commissioned officers and privates of the 13th Regiment L. I. (Sir Henry's old regiment) were there, she kindly invited them to visit her. Their names were—Sergeant-Major Brown, Quartermaster Sergeant Hughes, Colour-Sergeant Duffy, Staff-Sergeant Greabach, Sergeant Thomas Greabach, and privates Samuel Bicky and Henry Hall, all of whom served under Havelock during the Afghanistan campaign, and were present with him at the siege of Jellalabad. In reply to her inquiries, Lady Havelock was pleased to hear that these veterans recollected her when, twenty-one years ago, she was left at Kernaul, while Capt. Havelock proceeded on the active service of the campaign, and listened with deep interest to the details which they gave of the stirring engagements which took place amongst the mountain passes of Afghanistan. The little band of veterans, each of whom was decorated with three, four, or five medals, were then very hospitably entertained, and took their leave.

WARLIKE RUMOURS.—The Bombay Telegraph and Courier reports that attacks are expected upon the Scinde frontier. The wild tribes have heard of the death of General Jacob, and intend to try their strength in the absence of their dreaded foe. The raid is not expected to be serious.

THE BUDHAS are represented in sculpture sometimes as standing upright, but more generally as seated cross-legged, always in an attitude of deep meditation (impressive abstraction being the Hindoo beau-ideal of happiness), with a placid countenance and curled hair. The Adi Budha, or Supreme Intelligence, was an unconscious being, who therefore could or did pay no regard to the ongoings of creation; it was only in his conscious state, as incarnate in those rare men called Budhas, that he became an object of worship. Buddhism is therefore a worship of deified saints—a religious hero-worship; and the Divinity in man is regarded as the sole and true object of reverence and worship to mankind.—Blackwood for March.

THE EMPIRE OF ANNAM.—The last number of the Annales de la Propagation de la Foi contains the following information respecting Cochin-China and Tonquin:—"These two countries have since 1802 been united under the name of the Empire of Annam, and contain a population of about 25,000,000 souls. Of this number about 530,000 are Christians. Of late years the number of converts has been greater than it used to be, notwithstanding the fierce persecution of Christians which is carried on by the Government. The Roman Catholic missionaries have divided the whole country into seven apostolic districts—three in Cochin-China, four in Tonquin—and in each there is a bishop with a coadjutor. Of these fourteen prelates, ten are French and four Spanish, and they have under their direction sixty missionaries, and upwards of two hundred and forty native priests. Schools for training priests have been established, and they have now nine hundred pupils. The missionaries and priests are assisted by 650 catechists and by 1,600 females, who devote themselves to teaching the young and attending the sick. Thus, the whole of the missionary staff in the country is 3,464 persons."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

DESTRUCTION OF THE 26TH N.I.

ON Monday, a discussion took place in the House on the subject of the destruction of the 26th Native Infantry, at Ujnalla, on the 1st of August, 1857. Mr. Gilpin introduced the subject, and commented severely on the massacre of those unhappy men, which he believed to be "the very blackest page in the emphatically black book of the Indian rebellion." Mr. Gilpin read to the House a detailed account of the destruction of the mutineers, taken from a book written by the Deputy Commissioner of Umritsur, Mr. F. Cooper, who captured the mutineers and superintended their execution. It is impossible to read the flippant and joking style in which Mr. Cooper relates the capture and execution of these mutineers without feeling disgust at his bad taste; but it is only his style that we can condemn. Mr. Gilpin read two notes approving of the conduct of Mr. Cooper, the one from Sir John Lawrence and the other from Mr. R. Montgomery, and he felt pain that such men represented the British power in India; but it is to be remembered that these two great and good men approved only of the act of Mr. Cooper, and not of the reprehensible style in which it was afterwards related in Mr. Cooper's book. The 26th Native Infantry were mutineers, and had slain one officer, Major Spencer, and endeavoured to kill another, Lieutenant White, who narrowly escaped, his horse, however, having been wounded. They were endeavouring to join their brother mutineers at Delhi, and it became an imperative necessity to destroy them. The British at that time were terribly overmatched in numbers. Accounts were daily being received of fresh mutinies, attended by the most atrocious murders. The idea of decimating or pardoning mutineers could not be entertained at that time by any of the authorities, without perilling not only the empire, but their own lives. The fact that the mild Lord Canning approved of Mr. Cooper's conduct ought to satisfy those who read with indignation Mr. Cooper's book. His style of treating what ought to have been termed a sad, an awful, a dreadful necessity, merits the highest reprobation; but it is to be hoped his woful want of judgment will not blind the people of this country to the merits of the case, or the stern necessity of the measure, and they will not involve such men as Sir John Lawrence and Mr. Montgomery in that condemnation which we admit Mr. Cooper's narrative deserves.

LORD CANNING AND THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

ELSEWHERE we publish Lord Stanley's reply to Lord Canning's defence of his Proclamation in Oude. Lord Stanley's reply is very remarkable, and, to our mind, severely condemnatory of the Proclamation of Lord Canning, although it is tempered with remarks that show an extreme anxiety to soothe any angry feelings to which that disapproval of the Proclamation may give rise. Lord Stanley informs Lord Canning that, though anxious to support his authority, and to regard in the most favourable point of view any explanation of his public conduct, her Majesty's Government cannot alter their previously-expressed opinion regarding the policy he had pursued. They cannot think it wise for a Government, either in Asia or in Europe, to utter threats on which it is not meant to act; and they apprehend that the tendency of such threats, when addressed to insurgents in arms, is to drive into desperate and hopeless resistance some, at least, of those who might be induced to submit by an invitation couched in more lenient terms. According to the opinion of her Majesty's Government, the prolonged resistance of the Oude rebels has been caused by the threats held out by Lord Canning; for it is quite certain that no rebels submitted from the date of Lord Canning's Proclamation (March 3, 1858), until the end of the year, when they were driven to the borders of Nepal by the British army. The blame, then, of the "desperate and hopeless resistance" of the rebels must rest upon Lord Canning; but lest this should be too severely felt, Lord Canning is informed that her Majesty's Government express their full approval of his general policy, and are ready to believe that the measures taken by him for the suppression of the insurrection in India will, at no distant period, lead to the entire pacification of the country. Such is in substance the reply of Lord Stanley to the explanation of the famous Proclamation confiscating the territories of the people of Oude.

We cannot help thinking that Lord Stanley, in adhering to the censure cast upon Lord Canning's Proclamation by the letter of Lord Ellenborough, has been bound by the trammels of party, and has not had the moral courage to cast them off, and declare that the explanation given by Lord Canning was satisfactory, and that his policy was the right and proper policy to have pursued at the time. It is difficult to reconcile Lord Stanley's support of Lord Ellenborough's violent censure with his praise of the general policy of Lord Canning's administration in India. If Lord Ellenborough's view was correct, and the blame he attached to the Proclamation deserved, Lord Canning ought to have been immediately recalled; but it is quite evident that Lord Stanley is satisfied with the administration of Lord Canning, and it is only the exigencies of party that compel him to support a censure which will now be admitted by those who give any consideration to the subject to have been wholly undeserved.

It is remarkable that the first vigorous and effective act of a previously feeble and timid administration should have been so much misunderstood and so severely condemned in this country. The people of Oude had driven the British authorities from every station in the country. They had joined the rebel sepoys, and were engaged in strengthening the whole of the forts to resist the British army. In this state of things it became necessary to act with vigour, and to issue such a Proclamation as would deter the people from continuing their resistance. If anything could strike terror into the minds of Asiatics it was the threat of deprivation of property, which they fear far more than death. Lord Canning, therefore, at once (with a few exceptions) confiscated the whole of the territories of Oude. But he pointed out to those who had not been guilty of rebellion, or who were entitled in any way to indulgence, the means by which relaxation and indulgence would be obtainable—that is, their property would be restored to them. The policy of this measure was also, in other respects, good, for it compelled every proprietor of property in Oude to derive his title from the British Government, thus doing away with the previous unsatisfactory native titles, which led to interminable quarrels and litigation, and at the same time to acknowledge his allegiance to that Government. Yet it was violently condemned, and the conduct of Lord Canning was compared to that of William the Conqueror, who divided the properties of the Saxons among his Norman nobles. We can understand why, with the strong party spirit that prevailed when the Proclamation reached England, this view should have been taken by Lord Ellenborough, and promulgated through the country, but how it should be maintained by Lord Stanley after the calm and clear and crushing reply of Lord Canning we do not understand—except on our previous hypothesis that the exigencies of party sometimes compel the most upright and candid statesmen to set reason and right at defiance.

AN OVERSIGHT OR A WRONG.

CONSIDERABLE and not unreasonable dissatisfaction has been caused among retired field officers of the Company's Engineers and Artillery by the partial and unfair operation of her Majesty's Warrant, No. 334, of the 14th October, 1858. The 35th clause of that document promised to the regimental field officers of the Royal Engineers and Artillery on the retired full pay-list that they should be promoted in succession to the rank of colonel and general officer when those who stood next below them on the effective establishment had received such promotion. This privilege, however, probably through an oversight, has never been extended to the corresponding branches of the Company's military service. The late Court of Directors, indeed, in their letter of the 8th July, 1858, conferred upon their Engineer and Artillery officers whatever privileges had been enjoyed by the scientific branches of the Royal Army since the 6th of November, 1827, but her Majesty's Warrant of the 14th Oct. has since raised an invidious distinction between the two services. Now, it so happens that many retired field officers of the Company's Artillery commenced their career at Woolwich, and were actually enrolled in the Royal Artillery Cadet Company. At that time the Military Academy at Addiscombe was not yet established, and thus the officers of the scientific branches of the two armies were trained together and started together on their honourable career. It is, therefore, peculiarly mortifying to those gallant veterans who have fought and bled for their country in the sultry plains of Hindostan, to find themselves suddenly superseded by their juniors who may possibly never have seen a shot fired in anger, and whose lives have been passed in more genial climes. It is impossible that any affront can be intended to the members of a most distinguished service. It is evident that the omission is simply an oversight, and we do not for a moment doubt that the noble lord who now so ably directs the government of India will hesitate to remove all grounds of complaint, and to place on a footing of perfect equality the officers of both armies—or rather both branches of one and the same army.

IS ENGLAND RESPONSIBLE FOR INDIA'S DEBTS?

ON the second reading of the India Loan Bill, several members of the Legislature unequivocally expressed their conviction that England was morally responsible for the debts of the Indian Government, and that she would ultimately be compelled to make good whatever deficiency there might be in the revenues of that country. Though opposed to this doctrine, Sir G. C. Lewis admitted that the greater portion of the debt had been incurred in consequence of wars, whether defensive or aggressive. But the most costly wars were undertaken on grounds of imperial policy, and not for the benefit of India. Of this character were the Afghan, the China, and the Persian wars. So far as the Indian Government was individually concerned, there was not the slightest occasion for any one of those expeditions. No local interests were affected by the insult to Mr. Murray, or the affair of the Iorcha, or even by the presence of a captain of Cossacks at Cabul. It was the home Government that originated those expensive and not particularly glorious wars, but it was India that bore the burden and heat of the affray. Deduct the entire expenses of the Afghan expeditions, and the moiety of those to China and Persia, and then leave India to meet her own exigencies. But if, as common sense and sound policy seem to suggest, our Eastern possessions are to be regarded as an integral portion of the British empire, then upon the British empire as a whole must devolve the moral and pecuniary obligations of all its parts. If India may be justly called upon to contribute its quota to the execution of projects of imperial policy, it is just and reasonable that the imperial Government should bear it harmless for the consequences of such support. One of two courses presents itself for adoption. Either transfer to the national debt whatever debts have been incurred by the Indian Government at the dictation of a British Ministry, or acknowledge England's liability for the eighty millions sterling which, in round numbers, will shortly represent the debt of India. If the latter alternative be preferred, as the least inconvenient as well as the soundest and most just, no time should be lost in grappling with the responsibility. There is no doubt that a saving of upwards of three quarters of a million sterling per annum could at once be effected by extending the guarantee of this country to the East India debt. Individual interests may partially suffer, but that must always be the case in all great innovations touching the public weal. One point, however, must be clearly understood and strictly enforced. If the existing obligations of the Indian Government are transferred to the National debt, that Government must be restricted from opening any more loans at 5½ per cent., or in fact at any rate whatsoever. The present system of borrowing on all hands can only result in total bankruptcy; and at no time has the Calcutta Council exhibited such an aptitude for the solution of financial difficulties as may entitle it to much consideration or respect.

BOBBING AROUND.

It is a singular and somewhat discouraging fact that, notwithstanding the stirring nature of the times in which we live, no really great man has stepped forth from amidst his fellows either in this country or in India. Never was there such an opportunity as the present for an intellectual Saul to tower head and shoulders above the ignoble throng; but the dull monotony of respectable mediocrity pervades every department of the State. There is a large amount of fair average ability available for any purpose at a moment's notice, but there is no indication of that genius which is the gift of Heaven, no sign of a genuine man, no trace of an heroic mould. On all sides there is exhibited an abject dread of responsibility, resulting from that absence of self-reliance which is the unfailing accompaniment of a vulgar capacity. No public man, now-a-days, presumes to think and act for himself. Every one is eager to lay the burden on any shoulders but his own, and carefully eschews all appearance of individual action. Commissions of inquiry are, consequently, all the rage. It would be a wearisome task to enumerate all the Commissions that have been granted during the last five years, and a disheartening one to set forth their practical results. Monstrous as is the growth to which this evil has attained in the government of this country, it is far more rank in all that concerns the administration of India. Not even so simple a question as the organisation of a military police can be solved by the Governor-General in Council. There must be a double Commission, one sitting at Agra and another at Allahabad, to decide how many guards shall be posted at a tehsildaree, how many at a thannah. The collective wisdom of the Sudder Board, assisted by the sagacity and experience of magistrates, commissioners, and inspectors, is taxed to the utmost to define the proper strength of the guard for a Central and for a District Jail. The same grave and reverend seigniors are to take into their worshipful consideration the momentous question as to the number of military policemen sufficient to protect an officer while on circuit in his district or division. Can anything be more puerile than such an inquiry? If the Viceroy of India is sensible of his own incompetency to deal with a subject of such mere routine, the sooner he returns to Europe the better will it be both for India and his own reputation. Even error is preferable to such imbecility. Unhappily this is not a solitary example of Lord Canning's proneness to abdicate his rightful functions, and to devolve upon others the duties that strictly belong to the Head of the State. His mind appears to be of a merely bureaucratic order, and altogether unfit to cope with the novelties of his position. But when the times are out of joint there is need of men of a very different stamp. Individuality and character are then indispensable.

The Governor-General of India at such a crisis as the present one should be possessed of a bold and rapid conception, of a vigorous and comprehensive intellect, of a prompt and unflinching resolution. If he cannot rely on his own instincts and judgment he is unequal to the occasion, and should at once retire from a post he cannot maintain with credit to himself or advantage to the country.

ROYAL INDIAN MILITARY COLLEGE, ADDISCOMBE.

Regulations for the Admission and Examination of Cadets for the Junior or Infantry Department of the Royal Indian Military College, and for their Instruction and Training in that Institution.

I. Cadets will be admitted to the Junior Department of the College by nomination, under Sections 33 and 36 of Act 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106.

II. The age of admission is to be from 16 to 18 years.

III. An Examination will be held at Addiscombe, as heretofore, on the first and last Fridays of each term, for the admission of Cadets to the junior branch of the College.

IV. Every Cadet, before being admitted to the Entrance Examination, must present himself at the India Office, and submit the following papers: 1. A nomination paper, filled up in the prescribed form. 2. An extract from the parish register of his baptism; or, in default of that, a certificate verified by affidavit. 3. A certificate of good moral character, signed by the clergyman of the parish to which he belongs, and by the tutor or head of the school or college at which he has received his education for at least two years, or such other proof of good moral character as will be satisfactory to the Secretary of State for India.

V. Every Cadet will be required to present himself at the place hereafter to be determined, in order to be inspected by Military Surgeons, one of whom must be the Examining Physician, who will ascertain whether he is free from all bodily and organic defects, and whether, as regards physical constitution, he is in every point of view fit for military service in a tropical climate.

VI. No person who has been dismissed or obliged to retire from the army or navy, the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, or from any other public institution, will be appointed to the College.

VII. At his entrance examination a Cadet must satisfy the examiners:—1. That he can write English correctly from dictation, in a good legible hand. 2. That he possesses a correct knowledge of Arithmetic as far as Vulgar and Decimal Fractions and Evolutions; of the use of Logarithms; of Algebra, including simple Equations; of Geometry, as far as the two first books of Euclid, or the first two chapters of Cape's Course of Geometry, and part of the seventh chapter, omitting "problems on the ground." 3. That he can read and construe Caesar's Commentaries, or other book in Latin prose. 4. That he can read and construe from a book in French prose.

VIII. Every Cadet, upon his admission, will be considered a Probationary pupil only, for the first six months, at the termination of which time the Public Examiner will report to the Committee on the probability of his being able to pass for the infantry at the Public Examination at the close of his third term of residence. Should this appear improbable, either from want of talent or diligence, the Cadet will forfeit his appointment.

IX. The course of instruction at Addiscombe will comprise Mathematics, Fortification, Military Drawing and Surveying, Civil Drawing, Hindustani, French and Latin.

X. The test of qualification for a Commission in the Infantry will be—Algebra: viz., Quadratics and Cubic Equations, Surds, Progressions, Permutation, Greatest Common Measure, Least Common Multiple. Geometry: viz., Properties of the Circle, Proportions of Plane Figures, Problems, Quadrature of the Circle, Planes and Solid Angles, Application of Algebra to Geometry. Mensuration of Planes and Solids. Logarithms: viz., Nature and Use of the Tables. Trigonometry: Analytical, Plane.

In Fortification, the Cadet will be required to have completed eleven out of the sixteen plates of the "Course," and to have a correct understanding of the subjects which these plates are intended to illustrate.

In Surveying, he must be able to survey with the compass or theodolite and chain, and to take sections with the spirit level.

In Hindustani he will be expected to read with fluency in the Persian character, and write it legibly; to possess a competent knowledge of the Grammar of the Hindustani languages, and to translate, viva voce, from Hindustani into English, portions of works which he has read in class.

XI. The period of residence at the College for the Junior Department is fixed at three Terms, or one and a half years; but Cadets who after one year's residence may be reported qualified, will have the option of receiving Commissions in the Infantry, or remaining six months longer at the College to prosecute their studies, with a view to competing for Cadetships in the Senior Department.

XII. Cadets who are unable to pass a minimum examination at the end of the third term, will forfeit their claim to any appointment whatever. Those Cadets who do pass their examination and obtain appointments in the Infantry, will be required to leave England within three months from the date of their passing, and they will take rank amongst each other according as they are classified by the Public Examiner. The time also passed by them at the College will count for service in calculating their claims to Retiring Pension on full pay, if appointed from the College, or if they pass into the Upper Division by successful competition.

XIII. Cadets appointed to the Infantry from the Addiscombe College, will take rank in the army above all other Cadets who are appointed, from the commencement of three months previously to the date of the College Cadets being reported qualified.

Regulations for the Admission of Candidates for Cadetships in the Engineers and Artillery of her Majesty's Indian Forces. Under the 34th Clause of the Act of the 21st and 22nd Vict., cap. 106.

I. The Royal Indian Military College at Addiscombe will in future be formed into two separate departments, viz.:—"The Senior or Scientific Department," to be filled up entirely by competition; "the Junior or Infantry Department," to be filled, as at present, by nomination, under the prescribed tests and examinations on entry. In order to effect this object, the admission of Cadets to the College by competition will commence from the first term of 1860.

II. The Cadets who had entered the College before the 2nd September, 1858, the date on which Act 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106, came into operation, will be eligible to commissions in the Engineers or Artillery of her Majesty's Indian Forces, after completion of the prescribed course, and on the recommendation of the Public Examiner. With this exception, all appointments in the Engineers and Artillery of her Majesty's Indian Forces will henceforth be bestowed on successful competitors at Public Examinations, to be held as hereinafter described.

III. Examinations will be held half-yearly at the India House, or at such other place as may be appointed, commencing on some day in the first week of January and July respectively, for the purpose of testing the merits of Candidates for admission as Cadets into the "Senior or Scientific Department" of the Addiscombe College.

IV. Examiners unconnected with the College will be hereafter nominated by the Secretary of State for India.

V. The number of Cadetships to be awarded (being regulated by the wants of the service) will be communicated by the Under-Secretary of State for India to the Examiners, and will be published for general information two months previous to each public examination.

VI. After each half-yearly examination, the Examiners will prepare a list of the Candidates, classified according to merit, who shall have obtained the minimum number of marks, as herein-after specified, and the required number of Cadets, corresponding with the declared vacancies, will be taken in the order of their classification, provided that number be available.

VII. A Candidate who shall have obtained the minimum of marks hereinafter specified, but for whom there may be no immediate vacancy, will be permitted to compete at subsequent examinations, so long as his age may not exceed the prescribed limit; but those who do not obtain such minimum will not be permitted to compete at more than one subsequent examination.

VIII. The age of admission is to be from Seventeen to Nineteen years.

IX. The subjects of the competitive examinations will be as follows:—

	Marks.
1. Mathematics:—
Pure—Arithmetic, Logarithms, Algebra, Geometry, Trigonometry, Conic Sections . . . . .	2,000
Mixed—Statics, Dynamics, Hydrostatics . . . . .	1,500
	3,500
2. English Language, Literature, Composition, History, and Geography . . . . .	1,500
3. Classics:—
Language, Literature, Geography, and History of Ancient Rome . . . . .	750
Ditto of Ancient Greece . . . . .	500
	1,250
4. Languages, Geography, & History of France . . . . .	750
5. Languages, Geography, & History of India . . . . .	1,000
6. Experimental Sciences; i.e., Chemistry, Heat, Electricity, including Magnetism, Natural Sciences, Mineralogy, and Geology . . . . .	1,000
7. The use of Astronomical and Surveying Instruments . . . . .	750
8. Drawing—Elementary Geometrical Drawing (including the use of drawing instruments), and Architectural, Engineering, Military, and Landscape Drawing . . . . .	1,250

X. No Candidate will be allowed to be examined in more than five subjects, of which one must be Mathematics; and no one who does not obtain at least 1,000 marks in Mathematics, of which at least 700 must be in pure Mathematics, and at least 300 in mixed Mathematics, will be considered qualified.

From the other subjects of examination each Candidate may select any, not exceeding four in number, in which to be examined, but no one will be allowed to count the marks gained in any subject unless these marks shall amount to one-sixth of the total number allotted to that subject.

Any Candidate who shall not select French and Geometrical Drawing, as subjects of examination, will be required to satisfy the Examiners that he has such knowledge at least of the elements of those two subjects as shall afford reasonable expectation that he will perfect himself in both during his residence in the College.

XI. No Candidate will be considered qualified unless he attains an aggregate of 2,500 marks at least.

XII. The following papers will be required to be transmitted by each Candidate to the Under-Secretary of State for India, before the 1st of June and 1st of December preceeding the half-yearly examination. 1. An application for permission to compete. 2. An extract from the register of his baptism, or, in default of that, a certificate verified by affidavit. 3. A certificate of good moral character, signed by the clergyman of the parish to which he belongs, and by the tutor or head of the school or college at which he has received his education, for at least two years, or such other proof of good moral character as will be satisfactory to the Secretary of State for India. 4. A statement of subjects of examination, in which (in addition to Mathematics) he may desire to be examined.

XIII. No person who has been dismissed or obliged to retire from the army or navy, the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, or from any other public institution, will be appointed to the College.

XIV. Gentlemen who have been admitted to a previous examination, or who may be attending the junior division of the College at Addiscombe, will be required to submit only the first and fourth of the papers above specified.

XV. Every candidate will be required to present himself at the place hereafter to be determined, in order to be inspected by Military Surgeons, one of whom must be the Examining Physician, who will ascertain whether he is free from all bodily and organic defects, and whether, as regards physical constitution, he is in every point of view fit for military service in a tropical climate.

XVI. The period of study at the College will be one year, at the expiration of which the Cadets will be publicly examined and posted to the Engineers or Artillery, in the order of their merit, as declared by the Public Examiner, and according to the wants of the Service.

Engineer Cadets will go through a further course of training at Chatham for one year, as Commissioned Officers on full pay. Artillery Cadets will undergo a professional training at Woolwich for six months as Commissioned Officers on full pay.

A Cadet of the Senior Department, who, after a year's residence at the College, shall be reported by the Public Examiner to be not qualified for a commission in the Engineers or Artillery, in Mathematics, Fortification, Civil and Military Drawing, Surveying, and Hindustani, will forfeit his appointment. Also, in case of misconduct a Cadet will be liable to dismissal on the judgment of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

XVII. Cadets of the Senior Department will be allowed to count as service for full-pay pension a portion not exceeding eighteen months of the time which they may have spent under official instruction in England. Their commissions as lieutenants will bear the date of their last public examination.

XVIII. Young officers appointed to the Artillery or Engineers will be required to proceed en route to India within three months of the completion, by them, of the prescribed course of professional instruction at Chatham or Woolwich.

Note.—The Secretary of State for India in Council has determined to allow the sum of £100 to each Cadet who may obtain a commission in the Engineers or Artillery after a residence of two terms at the Addiscombe College, in aid of the expenses of his education and residence at that institution.

India Office, 22nd February, 1859.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 7.

EAST INDIA LOAN.

On the order for the second reading of the East-India Loan Bill, moved by Lord Stanley,

Sir G. LEWIS said he was not one of those who placed much reliance upon the Indian revenue, or upon the national wealth to be derived from India, and it was important that we should not exaggerate the value of our Eastern possessions. But as we had destroyed the native States, and entered into engagements with that country, it was incumbent upon us, and a paramount obligation, to carry on its government. When the form of that government was altered last year, and a worn-out constitution was put an end to, although the change was a wholesome one, he cautioned the House against supposing that it implied any alteration in the financial management of India, or imposed any additional obligation upon the Imperial Exchequer, the severance of India from the Imperial Exchequer being as entire in future as before the Bill of last year. After reviewing the enormous military expenditure in India—the great incubus of Indian finance—and the means of reducing it by our paying a part of that expenditure, he observed that if we were to lend assistance to India, no means could be more objectionable than that of guaranteeing an Indian loan. What he wished to impress upon the Government was, to take the earliest means of endeavouring to reduce the force of the Native Army, and to rely upon a system of police, to be substituted as far as possible for a Native Army. This would afford a better hope of improving the finances of India than any attempt to pare down salaries. He did not expect that this country would derive advantage from the good government of India, from which the natives would reap the benefit; nevertheless, its misgovernment would entail upon us most serious consequences, and it was the duty of Parliament to enforce a good financial administration in India, and compel the adoption of measures that would offer a certain prospect of the revenue of that country being sufficient to meet its expenditure.

Mr. BRIGHT took a most gloomy and discouraging view of the prospects of the Indian revenue, and suggested the reduction of the salaries of the Civil Service of India, and either the employment of a much larger number of Europeans in certain departments, or the giving much better salaries to a superior class of native officials. Moreover, with a better government in India, a small military force would suffice. He urged the reversal of the present system of policy in India; the establishment of something like municipal institutions there, and the admission into our councils and the incorporation with the Government of the best and most intelligent of the natives of India. He was convinced that the course we had pursued had led, by a logical and necessary process, to the position in which we now found ourselves, and that unless that system was reversed, we might have another great revolt, with consequences most disastrous to this country.

Mr. AYRTON did not take a disheartening view of the Indian finances, and assigned reasons for believing that when the means of communication were complete, which would be in a few years, there would be such an increase in the land revenues as would render it quite equal to the charge. He considered the proposition of Sir G. Lewis, that there must be an entire separation between the Indian and the Imperial treasuries, wrong in principle, and impracticable. He recommended the Government of this country to borrow money in this country at 3½ per cent, and to lend it to India at a rate of interest that would insure the repayment of the principal in fifteen or twenty years. He gave a qualified assent to Mr. Bright's proposal to admit the natives of India to a participation in the Government, and, with him, in order to keep down expenditure, recommended the reduction of the salaries of civilians.

Mr. EWART differed from Mr. Bright in respect to the financial prospects of India; he expected from the improvement of the means of intercommunication a great development of the resources of that country.

Mr. WILSON had not only no apprehensions as to the financial prospects of India, but he had the greatest hope of them. Almost every increase of the Indian debt had arisen from wars, and from expenditure upon public works which would be reproductive. If the increased interest upon the Indian debt were taken at £2,000,000, and the expenditure upon public works at £1,000,000, and there should be a deficiency of £3,000,000, he should not despair of seeing in the next three or four years such an increase of the revenue from existing sources as would enable the Government of India to bear this charge. He condemned the policy of alienating in perpetuity waste or jungle lands, as repeating the error committed by Lord Cornwallis in his Permanent Settlement; and he justified the views of the late and former Governments in relation to railways in India and to certain branches of the Indian revenue. He did not anticipate a falling off in the revenue derived from either salt or opium. He disapproved an Imperial guarantee of an Indian loan; he believed that the future rule of England over India was more secure than ever, and did not fear for the resources of the latter country.

Lord STANLEY made a general reply. He believed, he said, that when the resources of India were properly and fully developed, the expenditure would not be greater than they would bear. Although he admitted that the amount of the Indian debt exhibited an actual increase, he repeated that, relatively to the amount of the revenue, there had been no increase. As to the salaries of the civil servants, what could be saved in that direction, he remarked, would be insignificant compared with the military expenditure. With regard to what had been said of a supposed Imperial guarantee of this loan, he fully allowed that the Indian creditor had no claim whatever except upon the Indian revenues. What he had said on a former occasion was that the Indian creditor having the first claim upon those revenues, if they should prove insufficient to defray the civil and military expenditure, a question would arise as to the ultimate responsibility.

Sir E. PERRY observed that all the best authorities now agreed that, under present circumstances and present prospects, the finances of India presented an alarming aspect. Was India able to bear the burdens cast upon her? If not, and if this country would be ultimately responsible, it would be wiser and more economical to raise the money at once upon the credit of England.

Mr. C. BRUCE said, upon the question of the liability of this country for the Indian debt, he concurred in the opinion expressed by the late Sir Robert Peel in 1842, that, if the credit of India became disordered, that of England must be brought forward to support it. Upon every principle of equity, when the Government of India was assumed directly by the Crown it was taken with all its liabilities, and a possible contingent liability could not be repudiated.

The Bill was then read a second time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MARCH 10. GOVERNMENT OF SINGAPORE.

LORD STANLEY OF ALDERLEY, in presenting a petition from the bankers, merchants, and other residents at Singapore, asked her Majesty's Government what their intentions were with regard to the future government of that settlement. The importance of the position was sufficiently shown by the acquisitions which the French, Dutch, and Spanish nations were making in the Indian Archipelago, and he thought that we ought to have an officer with the same powers as the Governor of Hong Kong, competent to make treaties with neighbouring States, and to watch the aggressions of European nations.

LORD CARNARVON agreed with the noble lord on the importance of Singapore as a naval and commercial station, and stated that the question whether Singapore should be made a British colony had been referred to the Governor-General of India, and the ultimate steps taken would depend on the answer received.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH stated that Singapore is, in fact, under the government of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. It was a most important position, as it was a resting-place for troops going to China. As a naval station it was useless, on account of the extraordinary shallowness of the water. He thought that Singapore and all the settlements in those waters should be placed under the government, not of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, but under the Secretary of State for India.

LORD DERBY said the question was no new one, and mentioned some facts which had recently come to light in reference to Sir James Brooke.

LORD GREY thought that the Governor of Singapore ought not to be trusted with the power, as proposed, of making treaties, except under great restrictions.

After a few words from Lord STANLEY OF ALDERLEY, the subject dropped.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 14. DESTRUCTION OF THE 26TH N.I.

MR. GILPIN called attention to the destruction of the 26th Native Infantry at Ujnalla on the 1st of August, 1857, as detailed in a work entitled The Crisis in the Punjab, by Mr. Frederick Cooper, Deputy Commissioner of Umritsur, which he characterised as the darkest page in the black-book of the Indian rebellion. He believed that there would be no dispute as to the facts, for he should confine himself to the account which Mr. Cooper gave of his own share in the transaction. He read the statement from the book, whence it appeared that 500 sepoys, who were disarmed, had suffered death under very extraordinary circumstances. To this transaction a sanction had been given, Mr. Gilpin observed, by civilians higher in rank than Mr. Cooper, including Sir John Lawrence and Mr. Montgomery. He brought this matter forward, he said, because he wanted from Lord Stanley an emphatic declaration that he at least had no sympathy with atrocities like these.

General THOMPSON inveighed in indignant terms against what he termed a massacre.

LORD STANLEY said it was impossible to deny that the transaction could not be heard or read of without pain and regret, and the pain was greatly increased by the tone and spirit in which the transaction had been described in the despatch at the time, and in a book subsequently published. After detailing the circumstances connected with the transaction, he observed that these men were insurgents, who would have joined the rebel army; that, in the critical state of the Punjab at the time, a large force of disarmed sepoys being in the neighbourhood, a severe example was necessary to prevent similar outbreaks, and that these facts should be taken in mitigation or palliation of the transaction. He could have wished, he added, that such a wholesale execution had not taken place; but at this distance of time, and under different circumstances, we were hardly proper judges.

LORD CANNING'S POLICY IN OUDE.

The following is published in the Parliamentary papers, issued on the 14th inst., as Lord Stanley's reply to Lord Canning's defence of his proclamation in Oude:—

"The Secretary of State for India to the Governor General of India, dated the 9th Dec., No. 5 of 1858.

"My Lord,—Your lordship's despatches, No. 26½, to the secret committee of the East India Company, dated the 17th of June, and No. 17A, of the 4th of July, to the Court of Directors (in the Foreign department), having been considered by her Majesty's Government, I now proceed to offer such remarks upon them as they appear to demand.

"2. The first of these despatches is a reply to the letter of the Secret Committee of the 19th of April, commenting upon the proclamation issued on the 3rd of March to the talookdars and other landholders of Oude, after the reoccupation of Lucknow by British troops; the second is in reply to the letter of the Court of Directors of the 18th of May, covering a resolution of confidence in your lordship passed by the court on the 10th of that month. In both these despatches you explain and vindicate the course of policy which you adopted in issuing the above-mentioned proclamation to the landholders of Oude.

"3. I do not propose to follow, paragraph by paragraph, the elaborate arguments contained in these letters. They have been considered with the attention which was due to the high character and the distinguished position of your lordship; and I observe with satisfaction that the policy indicated in the document adverted to, as regards the claims of the talookdars and other proprietors in Oude, has not in practice been adopted by you, and is declared, on your own authority, never to have been intended to have been carried into effect. However indiscriminate and unsparing may have been the sentence of confiscation which your proclamation pronounced, that sentence has not been put in force, and the issuing of it would appear to have been merely a menace, designed to strike awe into the minds of those still arrayed in arms against the British Government.

"4. Though anxious to support your authority, and to regard in the most favourable point of view any explanation of your public conduct which you might have to offer, her Majesty's Government cannot alter their previously expressed opinion with regard to the policy which, in this instance, you have pursued. They cannot think it wise for a Government, either in Asia or in Europe, to utter threats on which it is not meant to act; and they apprehend that the tendency of such threats, when addressed to insurgents in arms, is to drive into desperate and hopeless resistance some, at least of those who might be induced to submit by an invitation couched in more lenient terms. They are, however, glad to receive and ready implicitly to accept your assertion that the practical effect produced upon the minds of the people has been but small. They learn with satisfaction that the personal explanations to which you refer, as having been given by your desire through the officers of your Government, have dispelled the alarm which its contents were likely to excite. And the whole tenor of your lordship's administration in India, and the moderation of language and of action which you have known how to preserve in circumstances of unusual difficulty and universal excitement, confirm, if confirmation were needed, the assurance which you have given of your intention to deal in a spirit of mercy and justice with those whose rights appeared to be imperilled by the language of your official declaration.

"5. While her Majesty's Government adhere to the opinion expressed by them respecting that declaration, it seems to them needless further to comment on a document which has been practically cancelled by yourself; and whilst regretting what they cannot but consider as a mistaken act on your part, they desire publicly to express their full approval of your general policy, and their confident hope that the measures taken by you for the suppression of insurrection in India will at no distant period lead to the entire pacification of that country.—I have, &c.,

(Signed) "STANLEY."

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRIZE MONEY.—CAPTURE OF CANTON.—The arrangement for the distribution of the proceeds of the booty taken at the capture of Canton, which limited the shares to the officers and men "actually landed," has been reconsidered, and all those who were on board any ship, or lent to any ship actually present, and in sight, or assisting in the bombardment, are to be included in it.

EAST INDIA HOUSE APPOINTMENTS.—Lord Stanley, President of the Council of India, having resolved to appoint twelve additional writers (by competition), 790 young men offered themselves for those appointments. Of the twelve who were declared the most eligible, Mr. Lord, jun., a son of the Rev. A. E. Lord, Independent minister, at Hershams, in Surrey, stood the first.

CONSULAR APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Hughes, her Majesty's Consul at Erzeroum, the last remaining Oriental attaché, has been promoted to the post of Oriental Secretary at the Embassy at Constantinople. Mr. Robert Dalyell, Acting Consul at Belgrade during Mr. Fonblanque's absence, is to take the post at Erzeroum.

THE HON. R. KENNEDY.—We have to announce the retirement of the Hon. Robert Kennedy from the office of Secretary to the Island of Bermuda, after the long service of upwards of fifty years. The best estimation that can be given of his worth as a public officer is, that Mr. Kennedy retires on a full pension.

OPIMUM AND OTHER SOURCES OF INDIAN REVENUE.—A return to the House of Lords, just published, informs the public that the total amount of the net revenue of the empire in India (all provinces included) in the year ended April 30, 1857, was £28,736,098—viz., £11,768,102 in Bengal, £5,917,514 in the North-Western Provinces, £1,254,022 in the Punjab, £3,019,756 in Madras, and £4,776,704 in Bombay. We subjoin the items of the revenue—viz., land, gross revenue, £17,717,580; excise (sayer, abkarree, and moturpha), gross revenue, £1,421,364; gross revenue from the foregoing, £19,138,944; net revenue from the same, £16,834,308; salt (net), £2,993,453; customs (net), £1,025,237; and miscellaneous (net), £4,022,549. That important article, opium, yielded a gross revenue of £5,003,162, and a net revenue of £3,861,151. Independently of the productiveness of opium as a source of public income in India, it is shown that, besides being the most valuable article of medicine in the whole Pharmacopœia, opium, as a sedative and narcotic, taken in carefully-measured doses, is by no means particularly detrimental to health or opposed to longevity. At all events, the observations of medical philosophers in those countries of Asia where the drug is consumed constantly and freely goes far to prove this. And it is well known that the "tatars," or couriers, under the genial and stimulating influence of a strong dose of solid opium, can endure unheard-of fatigues in the course of their journeys, and often travel for two or three days together without food.

POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS TO INDIA, &c.—The Postmaster-General, with the concurrence of the Lords of the Treasury, has postponed from the 1st April to the 1st January next, the commencement of the regulations lately announced in the Gazette for adding one penny to the postage of newspapers sent via Southampton and Suez, to defray the cost of the transit through Egypt. This concession has arisen from its having been represented that much inconvenience would arise from an alteration in the postage of newspapers to India, &c., being made without a long notice, owing to it being a common practice for subscribers for such newspapers to pay news-agents for a considerable period in advance, including the postage.

BANK OF EGYPT.—A meeting of the Bank of Egypt took place on the 6th inst., when the report was adopted unanimously, and a dividend declared for the past half-year at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, free of income-tax. The business of the bank continues satisfactory, a large increase having taken place over the corresponding period of 1857, and the sum of £4,695 has been added to the reserve fund. The directors had full confidence in the substantial character of the Egyptian currency, but, from the balance of trade turning against Egypt, the rate which was ordinarily 101 advanced to 107½ to 108. With regard to the negotiation of a proposed loan, it was stated that about twelve months ago the Viceroy wished to borrow £1,000,000, to be guaranteed by his railway receipts, through the agency of the bank, and that on the failure of the project his highness issued a series of six per cent. Treasury Bonds. Some of these are held by the bank, but not to a great extent, and are considered an undoubted security.

MESSRS. MAITLAND, EWING, and Co. (China merchants), who failed in April, have paid in full.

BOOKS.

Christianity in India. By J. W. Kaye. London: Smith, Elder, and Co.

Scarcely any subject at the present moment is invested with more intense or more general interest than the diffusion of the glad tidings of Christianity among the natives of India. It has long been known that Mr. Kaye was engaged upon a work relating to this very important question, and considerable impatience has been manifested to learn the matured opinions of so practical a writer, and one so eminently qualified to sit in judgment. At last the long-promised narrative is in our hands, but we regret to say that the first feeling likely to be experienced is one of disappointment. The style is uneven and turgid, and the tone of at least the earlier portion of the work decidedly sectarian. This is a serious drawback, because it indicates partiality and the absence of that serene neutrality which is one of the essential attributes of an historian. It is worthy, too, of remark that it is precisely in the narrative portion that Mr. Kaye most strongly exhibits his ultra-evangelical tendencies, while his speculations as to the present and the future are marked by that temperance, sagacity, and sound judgment which characterise his previous works. At the same time we are willing to make every allowance for the natural predisposition of a generous mind to take part with the meek, self-denying men who first offered the knowledge of divine truth to the swarthy millions that people Hindostan, and indignantly to resent the illiberal and oppressive treatment to which they were so long subjected. Besides, the intrinsic value of Mr. Kaye's latest contribution to Anglo-Indian literature is undeniable; and thus we gladly overlook any defects in manipulation for the sake of the practical result of his labours.

The history of Christianity in India appropriately commences with the legend of St. Thomas and the romantic adventures of the Jesuit missionaries. The character of Francis Xavier is drawn with great spirit, and his career, as an episode, is altogether a masterly sketch. On the immorality of the early English settlers Mr. Kaye is justly severe; nor is it surprising that he should turn with a feeling of relief from the contemplation of their gross sensuality to eulogise the blameless lives of such single-minded men as Ziegenbalg, Schwartz, and Kiernauder. Of the labours of the Serampore Mission comparatively slight mention is made, probably from the conviction that full justice would be done to them in the sympathetic narrative then in the course of compilation by Mr. Marshman. In his account of the pamphlets and debates which preceded the India Bill—or "Emancipation Act," as he is pleased to call it—of 1813, Mr. Kaye immerses the historian in the partisan, and his style and tone become unpleasantly imbued with the genuine Puritanic twang. The episcopate of Bishop Middleton reflects throughout the harsh, ungenial spirit of the evangelical school, and it is only when the mitre has been placed upon the brow of "the gentle Heber" that Mr. Kaye consents to dispel the frown that darkened his countenance while he told the tale of episcopal superciliousness. The late Daniel Wilson, however, is his model bishop. A good man, in truth, and a God-fearing one, but that he was equal to the position he occupied we must decline to assert. Having brought his historical narrative down to the present time, Mr. Kaye concludes with an admirable chapter on our future policy and the duty of Government and individuals. We regret that it is not within our means to make any lengthened extracts from this portion of his work, but we cannot deny ourselves the pleasure of adopting the following most sensible and accurate exposition of the attitude to be henceforth maintained by individuals and the State:—

"Let the State exalt, by all possible means, the blessed religion which it professes; but, earnestly desiring to hasten the extension of Christ's kingdom upon earth, let it leave the work of religious instruction to the missionaries. Let it rebuild all the churches which have been destroyed; let it construct others wheresoever there is a Christian flock without a fold; let it increase the number of its gospel ministers, taking especial care that the men who fight its battles are not without the means of spiritual solace and instruction; let it do all honour to the Sabbath, and observe all the ordinances of our faith, and neglect no special occasion of humiliation or thanksgiving for chastisements or mercies received. Let it by these and other means demonstrate to the people that the English have a religion of which they are proud, and that of the external observances of that religion they are never unmindful; and let it prove, by its unerring justice, by its respect for the rights of others, by its mercy, its toleration, its beneficence, in a word, by its love, that the religion thus outwardly manifested is a living principle, not a pageant and a sham. . . . Increased kindness and consideration towards the natives of the country should now be the rule and the practice of every Englishman whose lot is cast among them. The amnesty which has been proclaimed by the Queen of England should be echoed by every Christian heart. Terrible things truly have been done, and the Lord God of Reconcesses has suffered a terrible retribution to overtake the wrongdoers. For every Christian man, woman, or child, who has fallen in this great struggle, how many Hindoos and Mahomedans have perished at the bayonet's point, at the cannon's mouth, or in the noose of the gibbet! Does not such great national punishment wipe out the national offence? and ought we not to be so satisfied with such a measure of retribution that boundless compassion may righteously take the place of anger and revenge in every Christian heart?"

THE SOMA, OR MOON-PLANT, is a round smooth twining plant, peculiar to the Aravalli hills, to the desert north of Delhi, and to the mountains of the Bolan Pass. The plants were gathered on the hills by moonlight, and brought home in carts drawn by rams. The stalks were bruised between stones, and placed, along with the juice, in a strainer of goat's hair, and were further squeezed by the priest's fingers, ornamented by rings of flattened gold. The juice, mixed with barley and clarified butter, fermented, forming the soma wine; and lastly, it was drawn off in a scoop for the gods, and a ladle for the priests, while the residue was drunk by the company present.—Blackwood for March.

CLINICAL RESEARCHES ON DISEASE IN INDIA.

By CHARLES MOREHEAD, M.D., Principal of Grant Medical College, Surgeon to the Jemsetjee Jeejeebhoy Hospital, &c.

"A careful perusal of these volumes has corroborated our high opinion of the clinical ability of their author. They are characterised by the results of considerable experience; by the uniform desire to make all hypothetical pathology subordinate in importance to the practice of bedside observation; and by the absence of all tendency to dogmatism. From these circumstances, a thoroughly practical character is given to the work, though at the same time the author, when touching upon points of recondite and modern pathology, generally shows himself quite up to the knowledge of his time, and hence the reader proceeds upon a safe substratum. On the other hand, we think the more advanced in knowledge the reader is, the more will he appreciate Dr. Morehead's work. The practitioner already conversant with disease in India will fully appreciate it."—Lancet.

Chairman of the Scinde and Punjab Railways, and Indus Steam Flotilla; Author of "Indian Railways as connected with the Power and Stability of the British Empire in the East," &c., &c., &c.

"The Indus and its Provinces" is really as interesting to the general reader as it is essential to the merchant, the trader, the politician, and the historian."—Morning Chronicle, May 27, 1858.

"Not contented to repose on his laurels as the early advocate for the construction of Railways in India, Mr. Andrew has steadily persevered in developing his original idea, and now, after twelve years of incessant application, we find him concentrating his energies on the improvement of land and river communication in Scinde and the Punjab, though with ulterior views, extending far beyond the immediate benefit of those Provinces."—Allen's Indian Mail, June 12, 1858.

"What a glorious thing it would have been," said a writer in the "Lancet" of August last, "had the Euphrates Valley Railway and the Scinde and Punjab Railway been accomplished facts at the time of the present insurrection."—Vide The Indus and its Provinces—p. 14.

THE ARMIES OF THE GREAT POWERS

By LASCELLES WRAXALL.

The information he (Mr. Wraxall) is able to lay before his readers comes rather opportunely at the present hour, when continental ambassadors are summoned from Paris to attend our Cabinet Councils, and every day we hear louder rumours of a general European war. The information that our author is enabled to lay before his readers, though only, perhaps, an approximation to the truth, is particularly valuable at the present time.—Leader.

No work could possibly be more opportune, or more likely to be in general request at the present moment. Mr. Wraxall does not confine himself, indeed, to a simple Homeric catalogue of the forces each State can bring into the field, although even this would be worth knowing on the brink of a general war. He goes far beyond a dull recital of figures, and comments with an air of easy authority on the peculiar characteristics of Austrians, Prussians, English, French, Sardinians, Russians, and Turks. The author appears, moreover, to speak from personal knowledge and experience. He has seen with his own eyes the troops whose good and bad qualities he impartially describes; and during the Crimean war he enjoyed many opportunities of judging from personal observation of the comparative excellence of the forces warring in the Thracian Chersonese. The result is a most useful and compendious work, at all times interesting, but especially so when the question of peace or war is trembling in the balance. No young officer's kit can be considered complete without this key to the relative homicidal properties of the European Powers.—National Standard.

He has certainly given us an apparently complete and concise analysis of the chief European armies, and so far he is entitled to our thanks and approbation.—Literary Gazette.

A very readable and instructive volume. But better than his opinions are his facts. His description of the Austrian, Russian, Prussian, French, Sardinian, and Turkish armies is exact and interesting. He is also very accurate in his delineation of the composition and details of the British and Anglo-Indian armies.—United Service Gazette.

A more reasonable contribution to current literature than Mr. Lascelles Wraxall's account of "The Armies of the Great Powers" cannot be imagined. In an octavo volume he has condensed all the information every one desires to possess on the subject of the armaments of the great military powers—and he is a most reliable guide. Their means of aggression or defence are set forth clearly and perspicuously, and aimed at a glance the general reader is enabled to form a correct idea of the relative chances of success in the event of a protracted war. Not only the numerical strength of each army is given, but also the fullest details of its organisation. The different systems of discipline, the dress and accoutrements, the rewards and punishments, and the general internal economy of the European armies, are described in plain language.—Leeds Times, March 5.

BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH. New Road, London.—MORISON'S VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE is the only medicine that strikes at the root of all disease. This has been proved by an experience of thirty years, during which time upwards of 400,000 cases of cure have been effected. The Hygeian agents throughout the world are unanimous upon the Hygeian system of medicine introduced by James Morison, the Hygeist, who not only taught the public how to cure their own ailments, but also rescued the world from the dangers of false medical doctrines. The monument lately raised to his memory, by a penny subscription, sufficiently attests the importance of his discoveries.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.

—These medicines are invaluable to all sufferers, whatever the nature or duration of their maladies. In the fevers and relaxed states of the system now prevailing through the unseasonably mild weather, nothing is so serviceable in preventing disease and bracing the unstrung nerves, and giving tone, as Holloway's matchless preparations, which are easily and universally procurable, and can be beneficially used by the most ignorant person without danger. The Ointment, applied over the liver and kidneys, acts most marvellously, restoring them to healthy and regular action. These noble remedies operate equally on a diseased part of the system, whether internal or external; their wholesome influence over every organ, whether merely disordered or absolutely diseased, is incredible.

TEETH.

No. 9, LOWER GROSVENOR-STREET, GROSVENOR-SQUARE.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of chemically prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

Mr. EPHRAIM MOSELY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unattainable; and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This publication stands on quite a different ground from the other monthlies, and affects no rivalry with them. We beg to add our own recommendation to those it has already received. Though the conductors disclaim the idea of filling any vacuum, they certainly do so. They evidently also possess good information, and deal with most of their topics in a serious and searching spirit.—Press, March 5, 1859.

If it proves to be, what from the first number seems likely, a publication appealing more to the higher class of readers, whose wants are at present only supplied by the Quarterly Reviews, its chances of success will certainly be very considerable. There is no conceivable reason why articles written by and addressed to thoughtful men should only make their appearance four times in the twelvemonth, but, on the contrary, every reason to suppose that a monthly collection of such would meet with a ready and extensive sale. The purely political articles are on "Indian Finance" and "Parliament and the People," the last, especially, very ably written.—Globe, March 2, 1859.

First of all, let us bid welcome to the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," published by Messrs. Allen and Co., of 7, Leadenhall-street. It is sought to establish a sort of English "Revue des deux Mondes." This design is strictly carried out.—Literary Gazette, March 5, 1859.

Its articles, which are of a thoroughly miscellaneous character, are promising enough.—John Bull, March 5, 1859.

It is a new monthly magazine, that brings itself modestly into the world without any flaming announcement of the wonders it intends to do. . . . We are very glad to see in the first number a quality which gives it a full title to existence, viz., good sense, as opposed to the ordinary affectation of omniscience, superciliousness, or an unflagging vis comica. . . . We welcome any novelty in literature which promises to be sensible, well-informed, and gentlemanlike. There are several articles of merit in this number. That on "Literature and Life" is perhaps the best. Its remarks on Mr. B. Hope's notion of making literature a profession are perfectly sound. The very clever and much-wanted article against the silliness of our present Christmas pieces for the stage should be read by all who fancy they like going to see such things. The article on "Parliamentary Reform" we have had occasion to notice elsewhere; that on "Indian Finance" deserves attention; and that on "Hallam" is sure to get it without deserving it so much.—Spectator, March 5, 1859.

The first number of a new monthly publication, the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," deserves a cordial welcome. Professedly based upon the plan of the "Revue des deux Mondes," it exhibits much of the scholarly spirit, the freedom and independence of thought, and the thorough geniality of tone, which mark its distinguished prototype. The opening article on "Literature and Life" is remarkable, hitting the case to a nicety, taking the middle course between the reckless Mohockism of Bohemia, and the affected kid-glove refinement of the Saturday Review. All the articles are excellent; but I would specially point out a well-deserved attack on "Christmas Pieces," a biographical notice of "Hallam," and a review of Owen Meredith's "Wanderer."—Literary Lounger in the Illustrated Times, March 5, 1859.

Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. have just brought out the first number of a monthly periodical, called the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW of Politics, Literature, and Social Science." We confess that until we read this first number we had no very clear impression that we were in need of any addition to our already heavily-laden monthly literature; but a careful examination of the contents of the work has satisfied us that its projectors are justified in the undertaking. If they cannot be said, in the slang of the book-market, to have supplied a want, there is little doubt that they will create an audience. The best brief notion we can give of the publication is to say that it promises to become to the English reader what the Revue des deux Mondes is to the French, with an indefinitely wider latitude of topics and freedom of opinion. The critical element predominates, but it admits of the essay in its pure form, and is sufficiently elastic in both departments to embrace every variety of subject of current or permanent interest. In politics it ranges with the progressive section of the Conservative party, which would preserve the constitution by adapting it from time to time to the necessities of successive epochs. The soundness of its judgment on the question of Parliamentary Reform is displayed in the ablest and most thoroughly constitutional article that has yet appeared in any of our periodicals on the subject—an article which acquires additional value from the fact that it foreshadowed the whole of the scheme of the Government two days before the Reform Bill was brought forward. In social law and morals, the object of the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" will be to note the progress and collect the results of all movements tending towards the advancement or elucidation of those vague philosophical investigations which are clustered under the general head of social science. Good earnest is given of the resources at the command of the writers, and of the practical manner in which they are prepared to deal with them, in an excellent article on the "Homeless Poor." There are also capital papers upon "Russia" and "Indian Finance," and some admirable literary articles. This last department is pervaded by a spirit of independence, and a high scholarly tone, which we trust "custom" may not impair. Let us have at least one English periodical, written with integrity and good taste, to which we may confidently look for fearless and honest opinions. The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" promises to realise those expectations, and we heartily wish it the success which it deserves.—Home News, March 3, 1859.

It may with truth be said of it (the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW"), that the opening number promises well. There is a good healthy, manly tone about it (no small thing), and literary ability of no common order. We heartily wish it success.—Overland Mail, March 3, 1859.

The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" seems to combine, in an eminent degree, the amusement of the monthlies and the grave literature of the quarterly reviews. We regret that we cannot devote more space to the work, for we could not praise it more than its merits deserve.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette.

The papers are well written.—Patriot.

All the articles are written in an unaffected, free, and genuine style, on subjects of general current interest, not of common-place material. The article on "Henry Hallam" is made truly interesting.—National Standard.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE purport of the news received by the Bombay Mail of the 25th of February is decidedly satisfactory. The rebellion may now be regarded as a thing of the past. Oude remains perfectly tranquil, and even in the districts where order is not yet thoroughly restored there is little to record, and less to apprehend.

Brigadier Horsford's column having crossed the Raptée and entered the territories of Nepal, had a brush with a small body of rebels on the 10th of February, who fled almost without firing a shot. The Begum, it is understood, was willing to entrust herself to the clemency of the British Government, but her followers refused to allow her to open negotiations. A small but desperate band had signified their intention of fighting to the death rather than surrender.

The erratic Tantia Topee was still at large, though abandoned by nearly all his former adherents. Several of his chiefs and six hundred men of lesser note had given themselves up to the Rajah of Bikaner, and besought his interposition with the Sirkar. It may be presumed from the lenient tenor of Lord Canning's policy that their offences will not be visited with undue severity.

Some little blundering appears to have taken place on the part of a detachment from the Goonah column. Capt. Lambton, with a handful of the 71st Highlanders, and unsupported by artillery, rashly endeavoured to carry the fort of Nahirghur by storm, but after a useless display of gallantry was compelled to retreat. Two days afterwards a couple of mortars were brought up, but by that time the rebels had, of course, fled into the jungles, leaving eighteen iron guns on the walls, loaded and pointed. These guns have been burst, and some bastions of the fort blown up.

The campaign against the Rohilla marauders in the Deccan has been brought to a speedy and successful termination. The insurgents never offered a shadow of resistance, but quietly permitted their forts to be dismantled and their ringleaders arrested.

Colonel Davidson, the Resident at Hyderabad, has been summoned to Calcutta in order—so it is said—that he may be consulted by the Viceroy as to the most suitable mode of recognising the services of the Nizam and his enlightened minister, Salar Jung.

Sir Robert Hamilton is mentioned as having already turned his steps towards Bombay, preparatory to retiring from the service. His successor at Indore will probably be Colonel Ramsay, whose relations with Jung Bahadur are not sufficiently amicable to render his lengthened stay at Katmandoo altogether desirable. Colonel Ramsay's removal to Indore will create a vacancy at the Nepalese Court, which is likely to be filled by Brigadier Colin Mackenzie.

The Calcutta papers are full of enthusiastic accounts of the gratifying reception accorded to the 1st Madras Fusiliers, on their return from the North-West. The Governor-General, attended by all the official authorities, in full dress, made an excellent speech from the steps of the Government House, and warmly acknowledged the heroic services of that gallant corps. His lordship also feelingly alluded to the loss of their famed commander, the saviour of Benares, and the worthy comrade of the lamented Havelock. The European residents turned out in great force to do honour to the first regiment that stemmed the tide of rebellion, and with hearty cheers accompanied them to the river-side, where they embarked under a salute from Fort William and from the ships in the port.

From a notification that appears elsewhere it will be seen that the financial embarrassments of the Indian Government have attained an alarming height. On the 26th January it was announced that Exchequer Bills for small amounts were about to be issued, bearing interest at the rate of 5½ per cent. We now learn that a further loan of five millions sterling will be opened on the 1st of May at the rate of 5½ per cent—subscriptions being payable half in cash and half in 5 per cent. paper. If this loan—naïvely remarks the Governor General—should not produce the required amount, the Secretary of State will be recommended to supply the deficiency from England. The next sentence is yet more beautifully simple:—"No loan carrying a higher rate of interest will be opened in India in the course of the year '59-60, unless under instructions from the Home Government." Unless the Home Government issue peremptory instructions that no further loans be opened in India on any account, or under any circumstances, the only possible result, and at no long interval, will be a disgraceful bankruptcy.

While the Government are thus grasping at money on all sides, it is useless to expect that disbursements for prize-money or compensation will have the slightest chance of being made.

BENGAL.

THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

The "Right Honourable the Viceroy and Governor General of India is pleased to appoint Mr. George Frederic Edmonstone to be Lieutenant Governor of the North-West." And never was secretary promoted to a more difficult or thankless post. The task set before Mr. Edmonstone is a simple one, simple as that which Pharaoh set the children of Israel. It is to fight rebellion with a sword broken at the hilt. With the last surges of a great insurrection still beating over his provinces, Mr. Edmonstone is called upon to rule by means of the very regulations which the people rose in order to shake off. Not one single power has been conceded him beyond the authority Mr. Colvin found insufficient during a profound peace. The laws have not been suspended; the coercion bills are expiring; the Sudder is still acquitting; the individual energy of the ruler, the true source of order during a period of anarchy, is still bound in gyves of red tape. Mr. Edmonstone has to govern a country in which a murderous revolt is scarcely quelled, and must "refer" an addition of sixpence to a constable's salary. The only addition to his executive agency is a body of police as numerous, and for aught European eyes can tell, as dangerous, as the revolted native army.

With powers thus strictly limited, the Lieutenant Governor has new and weighty tasks to perform. He must maintain order, and, if possible, without calling in martial law. He must reform the courts if he would regain for the British Government that voluntary respect which the regulations and the Sudder have destroyed. He must so revise the revenue system as again to place men with something to lose between us and the ignorant population.

The first task it may be possible to perform. Opinion is stronger than laws, and the Lieutenant Governor may put down emeutes without reference to much beyond the rule salus reipublice suprema lex. The people, too, for the present, are subdued. The dread of the English soldier, the ancient foundation of our power, forgotten while sepoys were pampered, revived when they were destroyed. The people are tired of struggling with a foe strong enough, and disdainful enough, to pardon, and it may be years before a conspiracy again becomes more than a local riot. The police, too, so long as they remain faithful, are a great addition to our strength, and an addition which supplies our old want of means to check village rioting. The disarming order will be carried out with honesty and thoroughness, and disarmed natives betake themselves usually to the plough. Above all, the Government is at last awake, at last aware that resistance is a possibility. The maintenance of order will not, we conceive, be the present difficulty of the Lieutenant Governor. It is the two remaining tasks which will test his strength, and success in which will plant him in the first rank of Indian administrators. To us they appear, we confess, simply impossibilities.

If Mr. Edmonstone had power by decree to create new courts, a thorough reform would, indeed, be not so much a hope, or even a thing desired, as an expectation. He has no power of the kind. His plan, be it never so wise, or feasible, or popular, must still be strained through the sieve of the Legislative Council. If they approve, it may be passed; but there is no precedent from which to expect their approval of an innovation. Even if they do, the necessary Acts will scarcely escape the Committee-rooms during Mr. Edmonstone's tenure of power. They must be shaped, and pruned, and lopped till they bear some relation to those marvellous codes which have been twenty years in cooking, and grown sour in the process. Or if perchance Mr. Edmonstone, who has eyes, should perceive that the root of the mischief is not this formula, or that appeal, this stamp duty, or that power of postponement, but the regulations themselves, what is to be done then? The Legislative Council will not abolish them, will not even suspend them for a season. They refused even in the heat of the struggle to recognise the necessity of anything but patchwork, and they are not likely to draw back now. Mr. Edmonstone may strike, but he can use but the Regulation sword, and it is broken at the hilt.

So with the project for recreating an aristocracy. The Lieutenant Governor may abandon all deliberate attempts to root out the few remaining landholders. He may by personal courtesy soothe many a wounded pride. His known views may operate, when they are once known, to check inconsiderate sales. But he has no real power to change the tenure. He has no tabula rasa on which to build. He must wait for the gradual expiry of the old settlement, and even then can only propose a modification of the "pure village system." That proposal will affront all who are interested in the existing tenure, all native Tehsildars, all regulation officials, all whose prejudices are bound up with the elaborate system now in force. The proposal even when sent must be examined minutely by six persons, reviewed in six essays, sent home six thousand miles to be discussed by fifteen persons more. It is a revenue question, the Secretary of State cannot act alone, and the Lieutenant Governor will be fortunate if his plan returns to him a few weeks after his resignation. We have great confidence in Mr. Edmonstone himself. The service probably does not contain a man of stronger will, or more persistent energy. He is reputed to possess self-confidence, patience, and audacity, the secrets of Indian success, in a very high degree. But though Gulliver was strong in Lilliput, it was not while each separate hair was bound by its minute thread that his strength was visible in action. —Friend of India.

SMALL CAUSE COURTS FOR THE MOFUSSIL.

The Legislature, after much delay and with some inward misgiving, has at last extended the Small Cause Courts to the interior. With the want of thoroughness, however, which distinguishes their reforms, they have contrived to deprive the improvement of almost all practical value. The new courts were required first because the Moonsiffs' Courts are utterly distrusted, and secondly because their procedure is slow to a degree which involves a denial of justice. Instead, however, of correcting the first evil by creating new courts, the legislature permits the executive to invest the moonsiffs with the new powers. That is just as if the House of Commons, distrusting the Ecclesiastical Courts, should give them also a common law jurisdiction. The argument alleged is, of course, finance; but it is employed only to conceal the real difficulty. The Council are well aware that any Small Cause Court will pay, that the institution in Calcutta with its three judges and large establishment yields a considerable profit to the State. The receipts of such a court in a sub-division like Serampore would not only pay for two good judges, one European and one native, but provide a pension for the retiring moonsiff. Such a plan, however, would introduce an independent European judiciary, and must, therefore, be studiously avoided. The distrusted judges are therefore trusted with summary powers, and wider jurisdiction.

That decision involves as of necessity the second evil, inordinate delay. When the court itself is distrusted, its decisions, of course, cannot be made final. Two appeals are therefore introduced, one on both fact and law to the judge, and one on the law only to the Sudder. The first involves just as much trouble and loss of time as under the present system. Moreover, as there is to be an appeal, the record must be maintained. All evidence must be taken down in writing, all exhibits copied, all Amlah properly feed and flattered. Indeed, we fail to perceive wherein any extra degree of speed is secured. One great source of delay at present is the state of the moonsiff's file. In Serampore, for instance, where the moonsiff is unusually efficient, no claim can be heard within less than ten months. The new courts, if decently popular, will be in this respect even worse than the old, and the wretched suitor will have to wait twelve months for a hearing, and three months for the decision in appeal, and then content himself with the reflection that this, in the opinion of his rulers, is speedy justice.

Sir Arthur Buller, well aware that real reform, viz., the appointment of European judges, will not be conceded, proposes to diminish the evil. He would allow appeal on the question of law, but refuse appeal on the question of fact. The court is either fit to try the latter, or it is not fit. If it is fit, let its decision on the fact be final. If it is not fit, on what plea is it suffered to exist? Far better call the nearest shopkeeper in the bazaar, or coolie off the road, and let him decide. He will have brains and honesty sufficient to ascertain the facts if the moonsiff has none. We deny, however, that the courts are so wretched as this would imply. In three cases out of four, the moonsiffs display, when not moved by prejudice, or caste feeling, or hate of Europeans, or dread of the defendant, very considerable acumen and intelligence. At all events we would trust them a great deal sooner than the half-starved, half-taught wretches called their Amlah, who when appeal is permitted become masters of the situation. The principle of final decision on the fact abolishes the record. No writing is needed beyond the brief summary drawn up by the judge himself. No Amlah are wanted beyond a single well-paid clerk to act as sheriff, and be responsible for the behaviour of the peons. The appeal on the point of law may be submitted by post, and answered if necessary in eight and forty hours. With such a procedure, the moonsiff might in time abolish arrears, and contrive even to avoid postponements. There would then be some chance that an oilman with a claim of Rs. 60 would obtain his money within twelve months, and at an expense not greatly exceeding his demand. As it is, he is wise if he submits to the original loss. Without this precaution, the Small Cause Court will be simply what the Moonsiff's Court is now, an apology for refusing justice to the poor.

We have not the smallest hope that the suggestion will be adopted. Composed, they tell us, of able men, and certainly of men with a real wish to do right, the Legislative Council collectively seems to be affected with a mental paralysis. It has now been established six years, and within that time has accomplished but one solitary reform. The laws have not been consolidated, the codes have only been discussed. The courts are at their worst. The Sudder still exists. Justice is still unprocurable, save after an interminable delay, and at an expense beyond the means of the poor. The new code of procedure, debated for twenty years, is condemned even before it has been passed, and the Council creates Small Cause Courts and then loads them with record and appeal. Afraid of inertia, but incapable of reform, tenacious of independence, but crouching to the executive, ever promising improvement, and ever re-enacting the old abuse, this Council must be drawing to its end. In its death it may have this one consolation, that at least it wanted the energy which develops any feeling stronger than contempt. —Friend of India.

CHOWRA.—Government has imposed a fine of Rupees 25,000 on the village of Chowra, in the Benares division.

RECEPTION OF THE 1st MADRAS FUSILIERS IN CALCUTTA.

Fort William, Military Department, the 15th February, 1859.

No. 196.—Agreeably to the notification No. 176, issued on the 12th of February, 1859, the 1st Madras Fusiliers arrived in Calcutta on the afternoon of the 14th instant, and were received by his excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General with public honours.

The troops in garrison and the Calcutta volunteer guards, cavalry and infantry, paraded in front of Government-house, and received the 1st Madras Fusiliers with presented arms.

The regiment having taken post in front of the great entrance of Government-house, his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General advanced on the stairs, under a general salute from the assembled troops, and attended by the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the Hon. the Chief Justice, the Hon. the Members of the Council of the Governor-General, the Members of the Legislative Council of India, the Hon. the Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court, the Judges of the Sudder Adawlut, the Major General Commanding, the Presidency Division, the Advocate General, the Venerable the Archdeacon, the civil and military and naval officers at the presidency, and the personal staff of the Governor-General, and of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

After receiving the salute, his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General proceeded to address the 1st Madras Fusiliers in the following terms:—

COLONEL GALWEY, OFFICERS, AND SOLDIERS OF THE MADRAS FUSILIERS.

I am glad to have the opportunity of thanking you publicly, in the name of the Government of India, for the great services which you have rendered to the State.

More than twenty months have passed since you landed in Calcutta. The time has been an eventful one, full of labours and perils; and in these you have largely shared.

You were the first British regiment which took assistance to the Central provinces, and gave safety to the important posts of Benares and Allahabad.

You were a part of that brave band which first pushed forward to Cawnpore, and forced its way to Lucknow, where so many precious lives and interests were at stake.

From that time you have, with little intermission, been in the front of danger.

You are now returning to your Presidency, your ranks thinned by war and sickness; but you return covered with honour, carrying with you the high opinion of every commander who has led you in the field, the respect of your fellow-soldiers in that great English army in which from the beginning you have maintained a foremost place, and the gratitude of the whole community of your fellow-countrymen of every class.

Further, you have the satisfaction of knowing that you do not leave behind you a single spot of ground upon which you have set your feet, where peace and order have not been restored.

When you reach Madras tell your comrades of the Madras army, that the name of the 1st Fusiliers will never be forgotten on this side of India.

Tell them that the recollection of all that is due to your courage, constancy, and forwardness will never be effaced from the mind of the Government under whose orders you have served.

Tell them, especially, that the memory of your late distinguished leader is cherished and honoured by every Englishman amongst us; and that though many heroic spirits have passed away since the day when he fell in front of you in the streets of Lucknow, not one has left a nobler reputation than General Neill.

I now bid you farewell, Fusiliers, and I wish you a speedy and prosperous voyage to your own Presidency. You are indeed an honour to it.

At the close of the address, the 1st Madras Fusiliers marched away amid the cheers of a very large concourse of spectators, to embark on board their ships.

By order of his excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council.

R. J. H. BRACH, Major General,
Sec. to the Govt. of India.

H.M.'s 64th Foot has received orders to commence its march towards Bombay immediately.

MISCELLANEOUS

PROGRESS OF CONCILIATION.—We (Englishman) are informed that the authorities in the North-Western Provinces lately submitted to Government lists of the estates confiscated before the amnesty, and observed that it remains with Government to determine whether it will in such cases accept the confiscation, or waive the right which the award confers on it in favour of the offenders as an act of grace. The Government has decided as follows:—1st Class, in cases of mutiny and desertion, the confiscation to hold good. Class 2. Murder and plunder accompanied with murder of British subjects. That whenever the persons murdered were not of European blood a reconsideration of the cases will be admitted as in Class 3. Class 3. Local rebellion unconnected with the great political centres of dissatisfaction. The list should be carefully revised by the magistrate, who must submit a recommendation for mercy whenever there may be a reason for doing so. Class 4. Complicity in the general rebellion. The confiscation to hold good. Class 5. Cases in which revision is regarded by the Board as necessary. That the sentence of confiscation should be remitted in all these cases, except when the magistrate sees a sufficient objection to the remission, which should be explained in detail.

BENGALIE TRANSLATIONS.—Some men whose fears got the better of their judgment in the late mutiny, advocated the suppression of the native press and the discouragement of the native languages. However, in Bengal, where English education has been carried further than in any part of India, the educated natives do not seem disposed to repudiate their own language and adopt that of the conquerors, for many of them are now actively engaged in translations and original works in Bengali. There have been lately published in Bengali A Short History of India by Kedarnath Banerjee; A Manual of History (Ancient) Part 1, by Bhuden Mukerjee of the Hooghly Normal Schools, which gives a brief view of the chief states of antiquity drawn from the best European authorities. The Baboo published last year a very good introduction to Natural Philosophy in Bengali. Lessons on Objects, by Rangali Nyagaratna of the Hooghly Normal School; History of India, part 3, by Nilmani Boysak, based on Elphinstone's, Murray's, and other works. This third part brings down the history to the reign of Shah Jehan. Sushil Upakhyan by Madhusadhan Mukerjee, a publication of the Vernacular Literature Society. This little work aims through the guise of fiction to bring the subject of female education and female social improvement more to the notice of natives. The society has sold last year 25,000 copies of its works. This last moral tale is written in a good simple style and in a popular form, and we anticipate for it a wide sale among natives, and that its contents will be heard extensively by native females, for though few of them can read, yet they are very fond of being read to.—Hurkaru.

THE CENTRAL INDIA FIELD FORCE.—Month after month goes by, and year after year may follow, and the only reward received by the Central India field force is a record of its services. Rewards have been distributed right and left, in many cases well deserved, but in others with an inappropriateness savouring of sarcasm. Lord Clyde has been made Lord Clyde, and Lord Caning has been treated with the nearest approach to praise that he has ever incurred, he has been "let alone." Such consideration extended to his lordship has almost the value of the highest encomium, and may be considered a species of honour of the Viceroy's own invention, the Blue Ribbon of negative approval. From the highest rank to the lowest rewards are being bestowed; and the "faithful and the few" among the natives are receiving every kind of acknowledgment for not cutting the throats of their masters. Why the Central India field force should be made an exception to this pleasant state of things we cannot conceive. It is not that they have done less work. Both officers and men have gone through some of the most arduous and harassing duties of the campaign, both while united under Sir Hugh Rose and afterwards when split up into columns, when, as the author of De Grammont's Memoirs says of his own times, "great men commanded little armies and little armies did great things." It was only the other day that a portion of this force succeeded in catching and chastising Feroze Shah, after he had escaped from Oude, and had succeeded in evading all the troops on the opposite side of the Jumna. The history of the exploits of this force would fill a volume; and yet the neglect of them is almost as conspicuous as their deserts. We sincerely trust that before long this injustice may be remedied; for it would not be very creditable to the Indian Government to leave to men who have deserved so much the task of soliciting an acknowledgment, and of seeking from home the reward which should be spontaneously accorded to them in this country.—New Times.

JUGESHUR BUX SING.—The Magistrate of Jaunpore has reported the surrender of Jugeshur Bux Sing under the royal proclamation, and solicited orders as to the course to be pursued with regard to him as a leader of revolt, and also implicated in several acts of violence against loyal native subjects. The Governor General has directed the release of Jugeshur Bux Sing under the amnesty, and the restoration of his estates, if not already disposed of, and requested the magistrate to use his discretion in discouraging the prosecution of Jugeshur Bux Sing by others, as far as the Government is concerned.

BURNT TO DEATH.—We regret to learn that a gentleman of the name of Quill, a railway engineer, was accidentally burnt to death on the night of Saturday, the 5th Feb., in a boarding-house, No. 7-1, Chowringhee. The unfortunate gentleman had just come to Calcutta by the railway, and having retired to rest, lay down in bed, reading with an oil light near him. What occurred is not exactly known; but it is supposed that Mr. Quill must have dozed off into sleep, and, in doing so, dropped his book, and thereby upset the oil light upon the bed, which thereupon took fire and burnt violently while Mr. Quill continued to sleep. However it may have happened, when the alarm was given he was found sitting up in the bed in the midst of a blaze of fire, and dreadfully burnt. He was removed to the hospital at once, but died in the course of the next morning. From the degree to which the bed was burnt, it is evident it had been on fire for some time before anyone became aware that it was so. A more unusual or unhappy accident we have seldom heard of. It ought to be a lesson to all who are in the habit of reading in bed at night.—Bengal Hurkaru.

TANTIA TOPEE.—We (Bombay Telegraph) have just received intelligence that Tantia Topee is within thirty-three miles of Deesa. Colonel Macan has moved out with a force against him; but we have not the most remote idea that he will either be captured or even encountered. The manner in which he moves about is perfectly marvellous; and the people of the land are already beginning to regard him with feelings of awe and superstition.

GWALIOR, Feb. 1st.—There is scarcely any news at the present time worth writing about. The expected military changes form the staple topic. The 3rd Bengal Europeans are expected here tomorrow; the 86th are to leave in proportion as the 3rd arrive. The 64th, too, I believe, leave Agra for Bombay. The 6th dragoons and 9th N. I., along with the 71st highlanders, will form the Gwalior Garrison. Brigadier Napier has detained the left wing of the 71st on its way from Mhow and Bhopal. It would appear from his continually sending to Gwalior for reinforcements, that he has something in contemplation.

H.M.'s 78th Highlanders have been ordered to Agra, and thence to proceed by bullock train to Bombay, en route for England. Bullock train arrangements are being made, and will be completed in a few days.

PUTEHPORE.—The late deputy collector of Putehpore, for whose apprehension a reward of Rs. 5,000 was offered, has surrendered himself to the authorities there, and claimed immunity under the provisions of the amnesty. He is now in custody, and an inquiry into his conduct during the rebellion is being instituted by Captain Gowan, special commissioner for the purpose. Several witnesses of respectability and influence have already been examined, including the late magistrate and assistant-magistrate of the district. The conduct of the prisoner's brother during the same period is also being investigated.

CAPTURE OF NAHIRGHUR.—On the afternoon of the 19th January our column, consisting of two troops H. M.'s 14th dragoons, six guns Bombay artillery, 130 men 71st highland light infantry, 200 men 25th Bombay N.L.I., 100 1st Mahrata horse, 100 Mead's horse, and 100 Mayne's horse, with 320 of the Gwalior camel corps, under the command of Lieut. col. Rich, 71st highland light infantry, marched from Seopore to Nahirghur, which place we reached on the evening of the 23rd, after a stunning long march of about thirty miles through jungle and over stony ground. The cause of this sudden move was a report that a detachment, under the command of Captain Lambton, 71st highlanders, had been refused supplies, and fired on from the fort of Nahirghur, which was said at that time to be occupied by Maun Sing and his party, but on arrival here we ascertained the facts to be as follows:—Capt. Lambton, with a detachment of some sixty men of the 71st from Goona, was proceeding to join Gen. Sir R. Napier's camp, at Seopore, with 228 camels for the Gwalior camel corps, and a route had been furnished, in the native character, to one of the duffadars of the camel corps, with verbal instructions to avoid certain towns of known bad repute; but owing to some mistake, intentional or otherwise, the party went first to Chupra, which is out of the proper direction, and from thence came to Nahirghur, where they encamped close under the walls of the town, and the party sent for the usual supplies were indignantly refused assistance or food by the townspeople, who, it appears, referred them to the people in the fort, which is situated in the town; but finding the gates were closed against them they returned to camp, when a stronger party, under Ensign Leslie, was sent to enforce supplies; however, they were equally unsuccessful, and furthermore fired upon from the fort, which they had approached. No sooner was the firing heard in camp, which was also within range of the fort guns, than Capt. Lambton hastened with the rest of the 71st to the rescue. They were permitted to come within 100 yards of the fort, when a brisk matchlock fire and discharges from gingalls and small wall guns opened on them; for 300 yards they ran the gauntlet, and reached the outer gate, which, though very strong and massive, was assaulted and taken, the wicket being broken open by the pioneer with his axe; the gallant little party was led in by Captain Lambton. They found the inner gate even stronger than the outer, and well defended by matchlockmen, who kept up a hot fire from the curtains above it. The courtyard they had entered was found untenable, and the little force returned to camp, having killed a few men. The casualties on our side were three men 71st, wounded, one sowar killed, and three wounded of the Gwalior camel corps. Two days after this affair a small party of the 8th hussars and a couple of mortars arrived from Goona, but the rebels had flown to the jungles, leaving eighteen small iron guns of native manufacture in the fort, and a large quantity of native powder and portfires, and a few old tumbrils, &c., &c., which we have destroyed. The whole of the guns taken were loaded and pointed; but under the direction of the Bombay engineers they have been burst, and several of the bastions of the fort have also been blown up. On our arrival we ascertained that Maun Sing had not been near the place, and even his family, who resided here, had gone away some time ago. The opposition was made by some two or three hundred mutinous Kotah sepoys, who, should they return, will find that we have not improved the appearance of their stronghold. From the quantity of blood found on the stone steps leading up to the curtains over the inner gate, it is evident the 71st shot well to wound men through the narrow loopholes. The town was deserted for several days, but the inhabitants are again gaining courage, and returning by fifties daily. They are each furnished with a pass, without which no one is admitted within the town gates.—Delhi Gazette.

DINAPORE, Feb. 3.—The rebels, to the number of 300 strong, are said to be scattered between Patna and Monghyr; they have, within the last four days, made several unsuccessful attempts to cross the river, with a view to take refuge in the Nepal jungles through Teheranee. Our gun boats have been despatched to intercept them, but I have not yet ascertained what success has crowned their endeavours. The hot westerly winds have commenced blowing, and altogether we have every indication of the near approach of the warm weather; this will no doubt prove very annoying to the two companies of the 19th Regiment sent in pursuit of the scoundrels, and the remainder are to follow at a moment's notice. It may be interesting to some of your readers to learn that H. M.'s 10th are about leaving this for England. Volunteering is carried on with much spirit from 1st ult. up to to-day. Eighty-five men of the above corps have volunteered. It is rumoured that we shall lose our commandant, Brigadier Christie, who, report says, will be superseded by General Campbell.—Englishman.

MODEST REBELS.—A letter just received in town mentions that a party of rebels some days ago fell in with a bullock train near Shergotty, on its way up country, and broke open some of the boxes in the vans. Near Benares there is a party of about one hundred sepoys, quiet and well-disposed men, who will not lay down their arms or come in. They say they are quite ready to do so at any time, if they get their full pay up to date, and think it very unreasonable that they do not get it. We presume they will be offered not only their pay, but batta, prize money, and a medal besides!—Hurkaru.

CAMP JEYPORE, 6th Feb.—Such work and hardship as this I never before encountered. Since the 20th September last, we have marched no less than 2,800 miles, and crossed dozens of first class rivers. My kit fell to the rear on the 20th November, and has not turned up since. I had not a change of clothes between that date and the 23rd January, when I managed to pick up some at Nusseerabad. My servants, too, are amongst the things that were. We have had too much marching, and too little fighting, having only been present at the affair at Kapoor Rowa, and the battle of Chota Oodeypoor. We have but few men and horses left now: many having dropped off by degrees, quite done up. We march at 1 o'clock A.M. daily, and keep on till mid-day. One small rowtee is all that the three S. M. H. swells have. The game must soon be played out now; the rebels are losing numbers by desertion, and cannot muster over 1,000 men as I write. At present they are in Bikaneer, closely pursued by Showers, Honner, and Holmes. Quite sewed up, we have been obliged to cry a halt, but are excellently placed should the rebels break back through these columns and seek the jungles near Gwalior. They cannot get past Bikaneer, the rajah being in arms against them; to say nothing of the vast desert.—Poona Observer.

BRIGADIER HONNER'S FORCE.—A letter from Koosana informs us that the force under Brigdr. Honner, c.b., came up with the rebels at that place on the evening of Feb. 10, at about six o'clock. The rascals, as usual, bolted as fast as they could, but not without leaving two or three hundred dead on the field, and "loot" in abundance. Tania Topee was not, it is believed, with them, he having left the rebel camp at Deosa some days previously, with three hundred chosen horse, for Hindoostan (taking no doubt with him a large share of the treasure). The chiefs with the rebels on the 10th were the Rao Sahib, the Shazada of Delhi, Ferozsha, and Saman Ali Khan.

PERONE.—This is my third visit to Perone the head-quarters' residence of the rebel Rajah Maun Sing, whose name has lately been associated with those of Tania Topee, Feroze Shah, and others of equal notoriety. Our smart little force consisting of 100 men H.M.'s 71st Highlanders, 220 men 25th Bombay N.L.I., and 60 of Mayne's Horse, marched out to this place on the 11th February, followed in the afternoon by 100 of Meade's Horse. We have also with us a couple of Engineer officers and about 50 Sappers and 100 coolies, the whole under the able command of Captain Little of the 25th Bombay N.L.I., who is an intelligent and promising officer, and consequently great results are anticipated from our visit to the rebels' jungle haunts. On the same day of our arrival, a small party proceeded a short distance towards the village of Perrote for the purpose of reconnoitring, leaving the camp under the protection of the remainder of the force, when lo, we suddenly came on the small band of rebels and their chief, who were reposing in a very dense part of the jungle, quite unconscious of our approach; in fact, both parties were equally unprepared for such a sudden meeting. There was little doubt in our minds as to who our foes were, a few hasty shots were exchanged, and on the part of the rebels there was a little brandishing of swords, when they disappeared in the jungle like scared vermin, and were lost to sight, but not however before some eighteen of them had been killed—our casualties only three sowars slightly wounded. We had but about fifteen of Mayne's Horse out with us under the command of Lieutenant Blair, who behaved well, rushing very pluckily into the jungle after the enemy, with their gallant young officer at their head, and I am sure if we had mustered fifty more cavalry with us Maun Sing's capture would have been inevitable. That he was there on this occasion is beyond a doubt, as more than one person heard the enemy calling out, "bring the Rajah's horse!" now as Maun Sing is the only Rajah likely to be concealed in these jungles it must have had allusion to him. A very gaily-coloured "Palankeen," the property of Maun Sing, fell into our hands, and a number of the gentler sex, who expressed a desire to leave their roving lords and follow us. The "citadel" of Perone is built on a high rocky cliff, under which flows a beautiful clear hill torrent; Maun Sing's residence, a square pukka house, very substantially built, and loopholed for firearms, is close to the citadel, both of which are surrounded by a strong stone wall. The town is in a most dilapidated state, partly from decay of time and partly from fire. The whole stands in the midst of a dense jungle, abounding with wild animals and monkeys. Maun Sing is said to have with him a number of Felaites, men from Canbul, on whom he places great confidence, and well may he do so, for they are the only men who have shown any front. A scheme, I believe, is on hand to win them over to our side, by offering forgiveness and service, which is a move in the right direction, though the scoundrels do not deserve such mercy from us. General Sir R. Napier, K.C.B., and Staff, with an escort of fourteen men of the 14th Light Dragoons, paid us a visit, to see the lions of the place, and went back to Nahirghur in the evening. We are now very busy destroying the fort and Maun Sing's house, after which I presume we shall again join Col. Rich's column.—Delhi Gazette.

SIR JOHN LAWRENCE.—The Delhi Gazette has reliable authority for mentioning that Mr. Montgomery would arrive at Lahore on Feb. 23, and that Sir John Lawrence would leave Lahore on the day following his successor's arrival for Multan, en route for Bombay, at which port he will embark, if in time, by the 25th March steamer; failing that, by the first in April.

PETITIONS.—During the Governor General's stay at Allahabad, no less than 9,300 petitions were presented to him in favour of prisoners under sentence for mutiny and insurrection. Very few of these petitions were successful.

THE NEPAUL EXPEDITION.—The field force under the command of Brigadier Horsford, C.B., composed of the following corps:—viz. H. M.'s 7th hussars, part of the Bengal horse artillery, H. M.'s 2nd battalion rifle brigade, the 5th Punjab rifles, and the Belooch and Kumaon battalions; marched from Sudherrea Ghat on the Raptee into Nepaul on the 9th Feb. The object of this move was to attack a body of the rebels, which had taken up its position on the right bank of the Raptee within that territory. Having advanced up the valley of the Raptee about sixteen miles, the outlying picket of the rebels was taken by surprise, and compelled to surrender. A part of the force, consisting of a wing 2nd battalion rifle brigade, wing 5th Punjab rifles, and wing Kumaon battalion, was detached at this point, and placed under the command of Colonel Hill, C.B., 2nd battalion rifle brigade; making a détour to the left, this party crossed the Raptee, about two miles below the enemy's position, and attacked his right. Upon catching sight of our troops the enemy opened a rapid but ill-directed fire upon them; but either from inherent cowardice, or from fear of having their retreat cut off, after a ten-minutes' cannonade, they sought safety in flight. By this time the main body of the force arrived at the left bank of the Raptee, having the position lately occupied by the rebels in its front. The picture presented to the view of this body of troops was most pleasing: unenvied of their comrades, they joyously watched them pursuing the scamps. Colonel Hill conducted his flank movement in a most efficient manner: with three wings of corps he drove upwards of 1000 rebels (under the Nana it is said) from a good position, compelling them to leave their guns (thirteen) behind them. But it must not be forgotten, that this march was to the men of Colonel Hill's party one of the most fatiguing, perhaps, experienced during this mutiny. The total distance marched could not have been less than thirty-four miles, and within this distance scarcely a greater variety of obstacles could be met with in the shape of streams, sands, marshes, hills, and jungles. The streams crossed comprised the Raptee and its tributaries. This party crossed the Raptee itself three times that day, a dangerous stream to cross, owing to the rapidity of its current. A sergeant of the 2nd battalion rifle brigade would, to all appearance, have been drowned, but for the timely aid rendered by a comrade. It was sundown when the troops got under canvas, and I make no doubt every individual of the force slept soundly that night. It is said that the 2nd battalion rifle brigade is destined for Lucknow. Query,—when? Twenty-five prisoners were brought in yesterday, Feb. 10, by a reconnoitring party of the Belooch battalion.—Delhi Gazette.

MR. GORDON YOUNG, the Director of Public Instruction, in reply to inquiries instituted by the Supreme Government, stated that he had sent an official despatch written by him to the editor of the Indian Field. Mr. Young acknowledged that he had been guilty of an irregularity, but urged that the educational department was a peculiar one, that there was no occasion for secrecy in its proceedings, and that it depended on the sympathy and interest of the public for its success. The Bengal Government was of opinion that Mr. Young was deserving of censure, for having infringed the notification of the 30th of August, 1849, but apparently did not think a severe censure was required.

BIKANER.—A large force, headed by Sirdars from Joudpore, after looting and burning several villages (Aduo, Korea, and others), had gone to a place called Rattungurh in Bikaner. The Rajah of Bikaner rendered immediate assistance by sending out guns and cavalry, under one Jeytmull, to Soojangurh, to disperse the rebels.

REV. T. W. LINSTED.—We hear that on a full consideration of all the circumstances of the Rev. T. W. Linsted's case, the President in Council feels himself compelled to direct that that gentleman be no more employed in the service of the Government as uncovenanted chaplain at Malacca.

"SERVICE" MESSAGES.—The Delhi Gazette has been informed that instructions are shortly to be issued, forbidding the future exercise of the privilege now open to officers in certain staff situations and departments, of forwarding service messages by electric telegraph. "The cause of the restriction is that the privilege has been abused; and for the future, all messages sent are to be paid for, and charged for subsequently in a contingent bill. We have heard of the privilege of franking letters being abused to the extent of ladies' shoes being transmitted in official envelopes on public service. Something of the same kind, we presume, has occurred in this instance; though ladies' shoes cannot be sent by electric telegraph, their wishes may. Any how no discretion is to be allowed for the future, and all messages will have to be paid for.

Bijnour.—During the afternoon of the 2nd February, the small station of Bijnour was the scene of great excitement caused by the advent of Mareh Khan, the celebrated rebel of this part of the country, and five of his gang, who marched in under escort of a party of the Moradabad police, cavalry and infantry. A Bareilly correspondent of the Lahore Chronicle, in a late issue, mentioned his capture in the bazaar at Bareilly, and he has now arrived at this station, the inhabitants of which have had good reason to remember his last appearance. It is to be hoped his next appearance in public will be for the purpose of executing a pas seul for the benefit of society in general, by the particular desire of the powers that be. It appears that Mareh Khan has been rather familiar with the inside of the jails of the late John Company, having, during his life, been guilty of several little acts of dacoity, &c., which rendered his safe keeping desirable. He rose to some eminence amongst the Baghees of this district, on the assumption of the sovereign power by the Nawab of Nujeebabad (Mymood Khan), on which occasion he changed his name to Elahi Bux, which he had cut on his official mohur. A very pretty one, by the way, as several urzees bearing its impression, addressed to the Lucknow Begum, can show. Mareh Khan was one of the rebel leaders at Nugeena, where the troops under Colonel Jones (the avenger), on their entrance into Rohilcund, completely dispersed the Nawab's rabble.—Lahore Chronicle.

CAMP, NAHIRGHUR, Feb. 10.—A small force, viz., 100 71st highland light infantry, 200 25th Bombay native light infantry, and a part of Mayne's irregular horse, with some sappers, started this morning for Perone with ten days' provisions; they are, I believe, to blow up the fort, and cut a broad road through the jungle to this place, which is to be continued to Goona. Mead's horse joined us from Gwalior yesterday morning, and a company of the 9th Bombay native infantry. It is currently believed that we are likely to remain here another fifteen or twenty days, in fact, till a road is opened to Goona through the jungle. Maun Sing is said to be concealed in the jungle about seven miles off with 400 horsemen, and as long as he remains there he is safe.

THE DELHI PRIZE JEWELS.—The following advertisement appears in the Calcutta papers:—"Hamilton and Company have the honour to announce that they have been favoured with the commands of the prize agents, Major Sir Edward F. Campbell, Bart., and Major Charles R. Welford, to submit to public and unreserved sale by auction, the remaining portion of the Delhi prize jewels. These magnificent jewels are now on view at Messrs. Hamilton and Company's show rooms. They comprise several very beautiful large pearl necklaces in single and double rows of fine colour and quality, connected with emerald beads and drops, and with pure diamond pendants, or door doorkies; many diamond necklaces, or haurrs, of the best Hindostanee style, set in enamelled gold, with pearls, rubies, and emerald fringes and tassels; magnificent diamond armlets, or bagoos, pearl bracelets, diamond and pearl goolbunds or necklets; beautiful gold and enamelled chumpakullys, set with large white diamonds of first quality; pearl south norry, or seven row neck-places with diamond namms, singaras and jugnoos; earl tor rah with brilliant diamond, emerald, and Ruby ornament, &c. &c. The sale will take place on Monday, the 14th of February next; and the attention of native princes, rajahs, the gentry of India, and merchants are respectfully invited to this rare display of very costly ornaments, which offer an opportunity for very advantageous purchases.—Calcutta, 12th Jan. 1859."

SAUGOR, Feb. 13.—We have had Colonel Apthorp and Colonel Reece's detachments all over the Sahgurh district, and entirely cleared it of rebels for the time, but more have been driven down on the Dumoh district, from the direction of Punna and Nagode, to the amount of about 4,000, with two guns, 400 or 500 being sepoys. They are in the hills, not far from Jutta Sunker, and will probably be attacked as soon as the Dumoh position has been strengthened by a company of European infantry, and the general will probably try to hem the rebels in from the Nagode side. All here in a state of suspense, an arrangement is making for the stations of Saugor, Jubulpore and Nagode, and no one knows whether this will be a Bengal or Madras station, but the 43rd foot are coming to Saugor, and the 3rd Madras European regiment go to Jubulpore.—Delhi Gazette.

THE "PEARL'S" NAVAL BRIGADE.—The Hurkaru notices the services of the gallant Pearl's naval brigade. When, seventeen months ago, they left Calcutta, the men mustered 250 strong. They first proceeded to assume temporarily the charge of Buxar, thence to Chuprah, and from that place to Sewan. They built at Gai Ghat a bridge of boats, across which our Nepal allies passed, when hurrying to our assistance. On the 5th March of last year they encountered the enemy at Almorah, where they were then stationed. The rebels mustered 18,000 strong, of whom 3,500 were sepoys, with ten guns. The naval brigade was supported by only a detachment of eighty men of the Bengal yeomanry cavalry, and 800 Goorkhas. Nevertheless, the enemy received a sound repulse, being chased up to their very entrenchments, distant ten miles off. In all, this little band of heroes has sustained the honour of British arms in twenty several engagements. The last action fought by them was at Toolisipore. Yet the naval brigade have most fortunately escaped any severe losses. Only one man has been killed in action with the rebels; some have died of disease; some have been invalided; and in all the corps numbered 205 men on their return to Calcutta.

LUCKNOW, Feb. 16.—A salute fired at sunrise this morning announced to the world around, or within the range of its reverberating sounds, the assumption of the reins of the chief commissionership of this province by Mr. Wingfield, so we are now fairly under the administration and the new state of things. The results time alone will show. While I wish Mr. Montgomery and his good family a safe and pleasant journey to their new destination, or rather to their old one in a new sphere or a new phase of life, I wish Mr. Wingfield every success in his new career as head of this province, and as an instrument in the hands of Providence of its future destinies.

THE DELHI SHAHZADAH.—According to the latest intelligence of a north-west contemporary, Ferozesah's party was in Marwar to the westward of Seekur. His rear-guard very narrowly escaped being cut up by Col. Holmes on the 21st of January.

BRIGADIER SHOWERS was, by our last accounts, making long marches to catch the rebels. Intelligence had been received to the effect, that on the 3rd Feb. they had gone five coss beyond Munnoosur, in Bikaner; thus gaining a fair start of fifty miles of the brigadier. The 4th Sikh cavalry having joined the Agra column, gives an addition of 400 sabres. If energy, endurance of fatigue, and long marches will ensure success, the force will have it.

THE 71ST HIGHLAND LIGHT INFANTRY, now at Gwalior, is to be transferred from the Bombay Presidency to the Bengal, and will in all likelihood be stationed at Agra in place of the 64th.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE MR. COLVIN.—Dear Sir,—With the approval of the right hon. the Governor General, a grant of Rs. 3,000, in addition to some local funds, which are available, has been assigned for the purpose of erecting a dispensary at this station, to be designated the "Colvin Dispensary," in memory of our late Lieutenant Governor. The great interest which Mr. Colvin always evinced in the welfare of the charitable dispensaries of these provinces has suggested that this will form an appropriate memorial at the seat of Government, in the erection of which all those who wish to testify their respect for his memory may participate. I am therefore requested to solicit your aid and subscription. The design which has been furnished is plain, but handsome and commodious—in the Tudor style of English domestic architecture. Should the amount of subscriptions exceed the cost of the building, the surplus will be devoted to the endowment of beds, for the reception and maintenance of indigent patients while under treatment. A list of subscribers to the "Colvin Dispensary" will be periodically published in the local papers, and I am empowered to receive and acknowledge all remittances for the objects of the memorial. Your truly, JAS. IRVING, Civil Surgeon and Secretary. Allahabad, 1st Feb., 1859.

COLGONG.—A large fire broke out at Colgong on the 5th Feb., and burned the whole of the bazaars and several other houses besides. The amount of property destroyed must be over 100,000 rupees.

SIR MORDAUNT WELLS took the oaths and his seat as a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court on the sitting of the Court on Monday, the 14th February.

THE CHURCH MILITANT.—The Government of Bombay some time back enquired of the India Government whether a chaplain proceeding on field service is entitled to draw a travelling allowance of Rs. 200 per month instead of the usual allowance of eight annas per mile. The Government of India remarked that the orders for 1832, for granting an allowance of Rs. 200, have apparently been negated by the late court of directors. With reference to the financial resolution of 1857, chaplains and assistant chaplains proceeding on field service are entitled (in lieu of all claim of other extra allowance or to tent and carriage) to the following, viz. to the tentage of a major (Rs. 120 per month,) if a chaplain on the establishment, or of a captain Rs. 75 per month if an assistant chaplain.

THE ACCOUNTANT TO THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA some time since submitted to Government for sanction a draft of a set of rules for the conducting of the business of his office, connected with the payment of interest by draft in London, including the cases of transfer stock receipts paid into the open loan. The proposed rules appeared to the Government of India suitable, and the Government of India authorised the levy of a fee of one rupee for the double numbering and enfacing of the notes payable in London. With reference to the proposed increase of establishments, the India Government observed that although there can be no doubt that enfacing and double numbering will occupy the time of some clerks, it is equally certain that it will eventually save the time of others, for when a note has once become payable in England the accountant department will be saved the trouble of making payments twice a year. The president in council regretted, therefore, that whilst putting prominently forward the small increase of work which this new system will involve, the accountant failed also to set forth the very large decrease which it will certainly cause. He considered it also advisable that as the payment of interest to many of the holders will be made in London, the interest department should be reduced proportionately, as soon as the new system has got into play, and that this decrease will more than compensate the increase for enfacement. In the meanwhile the president in council authorised the proposed increase for six months only, to cease absolutely at the end of that time.—Hurkaru.

A JOINT STOCK COMPANY under the new Limited Liability Act has been formed at Rungpore. Its object is to export country produce to different parts of Bengal. The capital of the company, by way of experiment, has been estimated at Rs. 10,000, with power to increase, and divided into 200 shares at Rs. 50 each. The first general meeting of shareholders took place a few days ago, at the house of an influential zemindar of that district.

SHIPWRECK.—The Bombay Times mentions the total loss of the Vesta, Captain Potter, of Sunderland, 150 days from Liverpool, loaded with about 300 tons of iron and coal, and bound for Singapore. The vessel foundered on the 11th of January in the Straits of Gaspar, and the captain and crew were obliged to take to the boats. They landed safely at Batavia.

CASHMERE.—A letter of a recent date from Lahore informs us that either his enemies have managed to convince Sir John Lawrence that Raja Juwahir Sing was implicated in the late Jumoo conspiracy, or that he was mad enough to mix himself up in the matter at the very time when the Lieutenant Governor had gone so far as to obtain a promise of restoration to his Jagheer and property from Maharaja Runbeer Sing. His family have been expected from Jumoo, and it is said he is himself to leave Lahore for a warm station in Hindoostan.

ADDRESS TO SIR J. LAWRENCE.—The Judicial Commissioner, Mr. J. Thornton, has circulated an address to Sir John Lawrence, copies of which have been sent for signature to all the districts in the Punjab. When fully supported it is to be presented by a deputation from Meean Meer and Anarkullie. At least such is the plan proposed by Mr. Thornton.

THE ROHILLAS.—The following is from Hyderabad, dated 22nd January:—On the 19th instant I informed you that Brigadier Hill had closely invested a turret in which the Rohillas beaten by him on the 15th instant had taken shelter. The Rohillas seemed to think it best to endeavour to get through the besiegers before their guns were up. They made a sally at night, were attacked by the besieging party; they fought with desperation, and it was long before their ranks were broken. They at length fled, leaving a hundred men dead on the field. Our loss is seven men killed and thirteen wounded. This body is a detachment from a large body of Rohillas overrunning the country. It is commanded by an Arab, and has Arabs in its ranks. This is a new feature. The Arabs have not before appeared as plunderers in the Nizam's territories. A body of seven hundred Rohillas was within fifteen miles of the place where the affair above described took place. Sir Hugh Rose's force and Colonel Robert's and Colonel Hill's are all moving upon these. I do not know the directions in which they are moving, but I have good hopes that some one of these forces will give us a good account of them. Five thousand rupees I hear have been offered for the apprehension of Toru Baz Khan, dead or alive. He is gone towards Husnabad district, in which many Rohillas are said to reside. It cannot be but that these districts will be called to account for protecting marauding Rohillas if it be true; the fact with me is doubtful, that these districts give shelter to marauders knowing them to be such.—Englishman.

ARREST OF THE PEER-ZADAH.—We are glad to learn that Colonel Hill has taken the Jagheerdar of Poorzhul Jhowlah, commonly known as the Jhowlah Jagheerdar and Peer-zadah prisoner. He has been long known as being at the head of the Rohilla gatherings, and has at last been seized and imprisoned. It was a plucky thing for Colonel Hill to have done, considering that the fellow is the household priest of his highness the Nizam, and under the ecclesiastical cloak, has carried on much villany. The Talookdars and Naibs were afraid to report his conduct, lest they brought down upon themselves the wrath of the Durbar. The seizure of this man is of more importance than the defeat of half a dozen marauding bands mistakenly supposed to consist altogether of Rohillas. Their dispersion at Chickumbah proved what we always said, that the greater portion of them were men from the villages in the Huth Keenee, as this part of the country is called, and from Jhowlah. One of the charges against the Peer-zadah is, that he distributed green pugrees to the chiefs of the party who fought at Chickumbah. Green is the symbol of the Mahomedan faith, and the act is significant. Another body of 500 strong, more or less, similarly composed, but this time under an Arab leader, have possessed themselves of the Ghurry of Digrus, the ghur Enam of Deshmook, who was absent at the time. They, however, killed his son, and took possession of the Ghurry, which is a very strong one.—Poona Observer.

THE MADRAS FUSILIERS.—Garrison orders by the right hon. the Governor, dated Fort St. George, 15th February, 1859. 1. Intimation having been received that the Madras fusiliers would leave Calcutta, on their return to their own presidency, on the morning of the 15th instant, in H.M.'s steamer Sydney, and transport Tubal Cain in tow, they may be expected to arrive here on the 21st instant. 2. Their arrival will be made known to the public by the firing of four guns from the St. George's bastion at intervals of a minute. 3. Should the vessels be sighted before seven o'clock A.M. the regiment will land at 3 o'clock P.M. the same day; but if after that hour they will not be landed till 3 o'clock P.M. the following day. Should they arrive on Sunday at whatever hour, they will not land till the following day at three o'clock P.M. 4. The whole of the effective troops in garrison, including the body guard, will parade in full dress, on the north beach, at Messrs. Parry and Co.'s office, at half-past two o'clock on the occasion of the landing of the Madras fusiliers, and will form a street thence to the railway terminus, by opening out files as much as may be necessary. 5. The troops will be under the orders of the senior officer on the parade. 6. The Madras fusiliers will march through the street of troops to the railway terminus, where an entertainment will be prepared to do them honour. 7. After the Madras fusiliers have arrived at the railway terminus, the troops will return to their respective barracks.—T. THOMPSON, Town Major.

ENCOUNTER WITH AND DEATH OF A TIGER.—Ellore, Feb. 5.—On Jan 31, whilst — Eyre, Esq., son of Superintending Surgeon Eyre, ceded districts, was proceeding from Bellary, en route to Waltair, and when within a few miles of Ellore, a tiger (which has for some time past frequented that part of the country, dealing destruction amongst the inhabitants) suddenly fell upon a man outside his village at dawn of day and killed him on the spot. Mr. Eyre coming up to the spot shortly afterwards, and upon being informed of the occurrence, like a true sportsman prepared for the chase, but imprudently followed up the animal on foot with his loaded gun, accompanied only by his servant. They had no sooner entered a garden where the brute was observed to betake himself to, than first the master and then the servant were within a few seconds of each other felled to the ground by a sudden spring and stroke of the paw, the animal's claws committing most severe, but providentially not deadly wounds upon their persons, after which, the tiger most fortunately moved off to another quarter of the garden, leaving his prey an opportunity of crawling into the village, from whence the natives conveyed them into Ellore, where they received every assistance, and, it is to be hoped are, ere this, in a fair way towards their recovery. It is satisfactory to learn that some of the officers belonging to the Ellore depot went out that day after the tiger, and returned with the carcass of the monster, riddled with bullet marks.—Madras Athenæum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HARD LINES FOR SMITH'S BRIGADE.—Our columns have, from time to time, given utterance to what we had good reason to believe were well-founded complaints of the treatment experienced by the hard-worked brigade commanded by Colonel Smith. The different corps composing it commenced their service in the suppression of the Bengal mutiny, as far back as December, 1857. It is now February, 1859, and they have, therefore, been on a continuous march of upwards of a year and two months—so long that it is now almost a matter of history when they first started. They have had no rest, no respite, during this period. Through all the vicissitudes of an Indian climate, cold weather, hot weather, and rains, has this unlucky brigade been toiling and working, at the beck and nod of each successive general with whom it has come in contact. It was doing good service at Kotah, Chanderdee, Kotah-ka Serai, Gwalior, Powree, and Koonrai; and the best part of the brigade was detached under General Michel, and did all the work for him at Sindwaho and Korye. The corps are now halted pro tem at Tonk, and are ordered to get new tents from Ajmere, with a view to remaining out another hot season! Surely the Governor in Council must have forgotten the old adage, about riding a willing horse to death. If the authorities expect any results from another hot weather campaign with Smith's brigade we suspect they will find themselves grievously mistaken. Letters from the camp assure us that enthusiasm has given place to disgust and a settled discontent, and that if "the powers that be" only knew how heartily they are cursed by the whole brigade, both officers and men, at every additional mile they march and countermarch, they perhaps would take a little trouble to give the brave and long-enduring fellows some relief. Without instituting a comparison injurious to any other force, it may be said that Smith's brigade has worked harder, marched further, and been out longer, than any brigade or corps since the commencement of the mutinies; and there is no mistake as to the manner in which it has done its work, though perhaps it may have suffered from the modesty of its brigadier, who is not so au fait at picturesque despatch-writing as Colonel Brind, Gen. Michel, and some others, whose occasional effusions should rather figure as additional chapters in the "romance of war" than in the Government Gazette. So hopeless at present is the prospect of relief to the brigade, that Government have not even thought it worth while to tell off any stations for the eventual quarters of the corps, and officers and men are beginning to think that they are doomed to a perpetual zingari state of existence, and perhaps to be chronicled in the next generation as "Smith's Steam-Legged Brigade," or "the Flying Dutchmen of Central India."—Bombay Gazette.

SANGLEE.—By a letter from Kolapore, dated the 5th Feb., we learn that Brigadier-General Le Grand Jacob and Mr Lockett, C.S., with their establishments, left that station on that evening for Sanglee, where it is reported matters are in a somewhat unsatisfactory state. The young chief of Sanglee demands the right of managing his own affairs, because, as he alleges, he has been sorely plucked by his Karbaree. The latter again declares the young chief to be incapable of managing State affairs; and General Jacob and Mr. Lockett are gone off to arbitrate between the parties. Their tour will extend to Meeraj and Koorandwar, from whence they will return to Kolapore.—Poona Observer.

THE 25TH BOMBAY N.I.—The following is an extract from brigade orders, issued on the occasion by Brigadier Stuart, C.B., commanding 1st brigade Gwalior division, dated Camp Morar, 15th Feb. 1859:—"On the departure of the 25th regiment Bombay L.I., Brigadier Stuart has to express to the officers, native officers, non-commissioned and privates, his acknowledgments for their distinguished services during the time they have been under his command. They have fought side by side with the gallant 86th regiment, in storming the village of Gurrarea, the breach of Chadhin, in storming the town and clearing the street of Jhansie, and in all the actions in which the Malwa field force and 1st brigade Central India field force have been engaged. The 25th Bombay Lt. inf. have well maintained the honour of the sepoy of the Bombay army, by their gallantry in action, unswerving loyalty to the State, and cheerful endurance of much hard labour, in assisting to construct field batteries, and other heavy fatigue duties, when food was scarce, and when obtained time for preparing it could hardly be allowed. Brigadier Stuart begs to assure all ranks that he entertains the highest opinion of their soldier-like qualities, and that he will always feel the warmest and strongest interest in their future welfare. By order, C. B. BAUGH, captain, offg. major of brigade, 1st brigade, G. D."

RAPID INCREASE OF THE SHIPPING TRADE OF KURRACHEE.—We have been furnished by the Commissioner in Sind with the subjoined official return, which demonstrates most unmistakeably the rapidly-increasing importance of Kurrachee as a seaport. We think the data here given may safely warrant the formation of a private company for the purpose of providing a couple of steam tugs a year hence for the work in our harbour, which is now being performed by Government steamers. It is only a short time ago that we heard such a project was in contemplation by a few enterprising individuals connected with the province. The scheme as submitted to us not only seemed feasible, but according to the calculations made, appeared a most remunerative one, and the statistics which we now publish, although meagre, comparatively speaking, will, we trust, give confidence to those who are desirous of promoting so desirable a speculation. The number of merchant vessels in port is monthly increasing, and as better means of communication with the Punjab are now being opened up, whereby the produce of the Punjab and adjacent provinces is conveyed cheaper and more rapidly to the sea-coast, we may expect a large influx of vessels to transport our staples to England and the Continent. From this fact it will be at once perceived that the services of a steam tug must be in constant requisition, and by adopting a moderate scale of charges, such a vessel would realise a handsome return to its owners. Statement of the sums received quarterly by the port officer, Kurrachee, for tonnage services during the last two years, showing a very rapid increase:—1857—From Jan. to April, none; from May to July, none; from Aug. to Oct. Rs. 568 9 9; from Nov. to Jan., 1858, Rs. 232 1 6.—1858—From Feb. to April, Rs. 732 10 6; from May to July, Rs. 3,413 1 7; from Aug. to Oct., Rs. 2,165 13 0; from Nov. to Jan., 1859, Rs. 4,414 6 0.—Sindian.

FEMALE DETECTIVES.—Many of our readers will be surprised to learn that there are female detectives in our police force. The difficulty often experienced by the male police officers in detecting crimes of abortion and infanticide, so prevalent in the lowest grades of female society, has induced our active superintendent of police to maintain one or two intelligent native women as detectives in the police establishment, who carry their belts under their sarree. We have not as yet heard of any exploits of these watchers of the fair sex, but hope to see the objects of their detection made amenable to the law in the police courts.—Gazette.

CAPTAIN STEWART A. CLEEVE, of the 51st King's Own Light Infantry, has been appointed brigade major to the Queen's troops, in the Bombay Presidency, vice Murray, promoted to a regimental majority.

BARODA.—A letter from Baroda mentions that a durbar was held there on the 8th Feb. by the Resident, for the purpose of expressing Her Majesty's acknowledgment of the faithful conduct of his Highness the Guicowar of Baroda, towards the British Government, during the crisis in India. An ornament called the morchul, and gold toras, were presented to the Guicowar, in token of Her Majesty's appreciation of his faithful alliance to the British Government. In addition to this, a yearly subsidy of three lakhs of rupees, which the Guicowar was obliged under treaty to pay every year to Government for maintaining the contingent force, will not in future be exacted. The subsidy has been forgiven from the date of the present Maharajah Guicowar's ascension to the throne.

CAPTAIN BODDAM, of the Bombay engineers, has been appointed to act as executive engineer, Poona and Kirkee; and Captain Granville Close, of the same corps, is appointed to the special duty of preparing plans and estimates for the proposed Poona fortifications.

THE SALT MONOPOLY.—The commissioner in Sind has recommended to the Bengal Government to discontinue exporting salt from Kurrachee on Government account, and urged that the salt trade be left entirely to private enterprise. This is a move in the right direction, and is chiefly owing to the representation made few months back by Messrs. Warwick, Waller and Co.

ANNUAL INSPECTION AND REVIEW OF THE 6TH BOMBAY N.I.—The inspection of this hard-worked and most well-conducted regiment, which has all through the recent troublous times formed a portion of the garrison of Poona, was concluded on the morning of Thursday, the 17th Feb., after having lasted four days, with the review parade. The inspection was taken by Brigadier Hale, commanding the Poona division of the army, who expressed himself as being highly gratified at the admirable order in which he found the corps, which has for upwards of two years been commanded by Captain J. Field, both with respect to its drill and discipline. Brigadier Hale also spoke in the highest terms of praise of the excellent conduct of the corps in quarters, and added that the same reflected very great credit upon its commanding officer and the other officers present with the corps, and that he should make a most favourable report of it to his excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

THE "MINNESOTA" left Bombay on the 14th Feb., for Muscat, proceeding thence to Zanzibar, afterwards to Boston. The trade from these ports, especially with Zanzibar, is every year becoming more and more extensive, and Jonathan likes to show his customers that he has an eye on them. The officers have, we believe, expressed themselves very warmly as to the gratification they have derived from their visit to Bombay. A large party of them made a run up the Bhore Ghaut to admire the scenery and examine the railway works. Captain Dupont and Mr. Biddle extended their trip to Poona.

NOSE CUTTING.—One Hussonsha, a Mahomedan fakeer, is on his trial at the Mazagon police-office, on a charge of cutting and wounding his wife Ayedbaee, with intent to do her some grievous bodily harm. It appears that one night the prisoner, having suspected his wife of faithlessness to him, cut off her nose with a knife. An alarm was raised, and her mother informed some policeman, who took the man into custody. The prisoner admitted his guilt, and seemed to glory in it.

TELEGRAPHIC PROGRESS.—Mr. Hartley Gisborne, Chief Engineer of the Red Sea and India Electric Telegraph Company, arrived at Kurrachee on Saturday the 12th Feb. in her Majesty's steam frigate Cyclops. We are glad to hear that the soundings taken by this gentleman in the Red Sea are very satisfactory, and that in the short space of two years at most we are likely to have instantaneous communication with Great Britain and Ireland. We understand that there will be a telegraph office at Munora and another in the compound of the collector's kutcherry.—Sindian.

CENTRAL ASIA.

Our Cabul advices are from January 17 to February 3:—

On the 17th the Ameer told Jaffer Ali Khan that he was wanted by his old master, Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan, at Cabul, on which he went to his new master, Nawab Foujdar Khan, and informed him of the same. Nawab Foujdar Khan remarked, that if Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan wanted him (Jaffer Ali Khan), he should have written direct to him (Nawab Foujdar Khan), and giving Rs. 50 as reward to Jaffer Ali Khan, he permitted him to go. The Ameer also sent Hyder Aly with Rs. 4,000 to Sirdar Mahomed Azum Khan. On the 18th, Mirza Hyder Ali, Mookhter of Sirdar Gholam Moheuddin Khan, represented that Sirdar Shere Ali Khan had received news that about four lacs of Russians had entered the boundaries of Persia, and intended to proceed, via Herat and Candahar, to Hindostan, and if the King of Turkey opposed their advance, they were instructed by their emperor to decide the matter with him first. The King of Persia was also collecting forces!! On the 19th Sirdar Mahomed Oosman Khan having obtained leave, has proceeded to Balabagh to celebrate the marriage of his son. Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan has been ordered to proceed to Sunkokheil with his forces, but the courtiers of the Ameer seem displeased with this proceeding, as they are afraid some light will be thrown on their roguery, which it appears they have committed there. A letter was received from Sirdar Mahomed Ufzul Khan, ruler of Balkh, stating that news had reached from Herat that the King of Turkey has sent Omer Pacha with two or three lacs of troops to Bagdad to oppose the advance of the Russians on Hindostan. Nawab Foujdar Khan corroborated this statement by saying that he also had heard it from two Hajjees who had lately arrived. The Chowdrees of Sunkokheil were presented by Nazir Naeem Khan, who represented that they were prepared to pay up the arrears of revenue if the march of troops against them was countermanded. On the 20th the Ameer bestowed Khilluts on the Mulliks of Sunkokheil, and requested them to pay the amount of revenue and to restore the property which had been stolen from the Syuds.

On the 21st a kossid from Ghuznee represented that very little snow had fallen there, and the roads were open for the travellers. On the 22nd Dost Mahomed Khan said in a public durbar, that he had heard from the sister of Dad Mahomed Khan, that Taj Mahomed Khan had sent Azeez-ood-deen Khan to murder her father, Gholam Mahomed Khan, and that Dad Mahomed Khan had seen the man. On the 23rd, an urzee from Sirdar Mahomed Utzul Khan was received, stating that the ruler of Koondooz had levied a tax of three rupees from every house in that place, and thus collected about three lacs of rupees and proceeded to Bokhara, from the king of which place he has asked for aid against the Affghans. The king has sent some of his artillery to Koondooz. The Russian agent is still at Bokhara, and persuades the king to send forces against the Affghans, and there is every probability the Bokhara king may send forces against Balkh. Sirdar Mahomed Afzul Khan further states that he has proceeded to Tash Kurgan to oppose the advance of the Bokhara forces. On the 24th, the officers of the regiment of Sirdar Shere Ally Khan, who were encamped on sandy ground to the north of Jellalabad, represented that they could not carry on their practice there, as there was much sand. The Ameer ordered them to pitch their tents on the river side of the town. On the 25th, a man from Koh Sufeid represented that a certain person had killed his son, and that he had no power to take vengeance. The Ameer sent some of his own men to arrest and bring the murderer, who was accordingly brought and made over to the injured man, who took him out of the city and killed him. Fifty men of Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan's regiment arrived in Jellalabad from Cabul. On the 28th, Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan despatched a letter by a kossid to his son, Sirdar Mahomed Ismael Khan, requesting him to come to Jellalabad with his regiment and mule artillery, and sent his own camels to bring the tents and camp equipage of the same. On the 27th, Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan stated that the muskets of his regiment had become very old and useless, and that he wished the new muskets from Peshawur might be given to the regiment. The Ameer ordered accordingly, and 800 muskets were given him. The Ameer ordered the Mulliks and other chiefs to go and prepare themselves, as he himself had an intention of proceeding to Sunkokheil to bring under submission the tribe of Sinwarees, who had been plundering and murdering travellers, and had made it their profession. On the 28th, Sirdar Mahomed Ameen Khan and Ubdool Ruzak Khan offered a lakh of rupees more than before for the district and town of Jellalabad. They also asked permission to survey Jellalabad. The Ameer accepted the offer, and permitted them to do as they liked. On the 29th, a letter was received from Mahomed Shuref Khan from Cabul, stating that he had received news from Sirdar Mahomed Azeem Khan, who writes that he has arrived at Bameean, and that after staying two or three days there on account of the severity of the weather he will proceed to Balkh. On the 30th some certain person came into the durbar, and represented that he had heard from two or threemen come from Peshawur that some English gentlemen had arrived with some artillery at Jumrood. These persons were sent for and questioned as to the truth of the report, who replied that it was in reality so. The Ameer said that he was a friend of the British Government, and had no fear if they come in his own capital. On the 31st, an urzee was received from Sirdar Shere Aly Khan from Kandahar, stating that when Sirdar Rehm Dil Khan had arrived in Teheran, he received fifteen Boodkees a day, and now the king has ordered him to have twenty boodkees a day. On the 1st February, Mahomed Shah Khan asked permission to proceed to Lughman and repair his fort there. The Ameer granted him permission, and ordered five sowars to escort him safely. On the 2nd, the Ameer ordered Nazir Naeem Khan to bring to his presence the Meer Afghan and his men, who were accordingly brought. The Ameer bestowed a khillut of one cashmere shawl and one mahoot cloak on the Meer Afghan and a cloak on each of his men.—Lahore Chronicle.

TERRITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

Fort William, Feb. 22, 1859.

The following is an extract from a Notification published in a Gazette Extraordinary on the twenty-first instant, announcing the final arrangement to be made for the service of the year Fifty-nine—Sixty. Reduction in the present enormous war charges will be made as early, and to as great an extent, as may be safe. Measures will be taken for the permanent increase of the Indian revenues as largely as may be consistent with sound policy; but as the full benefit of these operations will not be felt in Fifty-nine—Sixty, the Governor General in Council hereby announces that the amount of money which he will look to the Indian market to be raised by loan in order to provide for the service of Fifty-nine—Sixty, is five crores of rupees; when this amount shall have been realised, the loan of Fifty-nine—Sixty will be closed, and no further loan will be opened in India during the year. In pursuance of the principle adopted on the Twentieth of July, Fifty-seven, the loan to be opened on the first May next will be a five and a half per cent. loan, to which subscriptions will be receivable in case and half five per cent. paper. If this loan should not produce the required amount, the Governor General in Council will recommend to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State that the deficiency should be supplied from England. No loan carrying a higher rate of interest will be opened in India in the course of the year Fifty-nine—Sixty, unless under instructions from the Home Government. The issue of Treasury Bills on the terms noticed on the 26th of January, 1859, will be closed on the 30th of April. A new issue of Treasury Bills will be notified from the first of May, bearing interest at the rate of two and a half pias per diem. The sum which may be received upon these notes will not be counted as a part of the five crores which the government desires to raise by loan.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor in Council,
B. H. ELLIS,

Acting Secretary to Government.

CHINA.—Sir John Bowring's functions as Superintendent of Trade in China, having been merged in those of the minister lately appointed to Peking, he will, as a matter of course, retire from the unpaid office of Governor of Hong Kong, hitherto held in conjunction with that of Plenipotentiary and Superintendent of Trade in China. The principal officer at Hong Kong will, therefore, for the future discharge solely the duties of governor in that colony. The first governor of Hong Kong under the new arrangement will be Mr. Hercules Robinson, at present lieutenant-governor of St. Christopher's. Mr. Robinson, whose exertions in various official situations in Ireland both during and after the famine, were eminently successful, received in 1854 the appointment at St. Christopher's. The distinction with which he has there discharged the duties of his post have no doubt marked him out for the difficult position he is about to occupy in a colony to which recent events have given increased importance.

Affair at Putna.

From Brigdr. F. Wheler, comdg. Saugor district, to the Asst. Adjt. Gen., Saugor field div.

Dated Saugor, 15th Nov., 1858.

SIR,—I have great pleasure in forwarding a letter from Lieut. Clemons, 3rd Madras Eur. regt., comdg. a detach. which left Saugor on the 8th inst., with treasure, together with copies of two letters from Lieut. col. Partridge to him, the one asking the Lieut. for co-operation in an attack on rebels, and the other thanking him for such co-operation.

Lieut. Clemons seems to have taken a very active and prominent part in this affair, and to have gained the entire approbation of Lieut. col. Partridge.

Putna is a fortified town and hill, with a deep jungle on one, and some jungle on all sides. It was stormed in May last by a detach. 31st Ben. N. I., under Capt. Finch and Lieut. Fellowes; but the town was not destroyed, as it should have been. It is one of the resorts of Jahgurr Bundelas, and will probably be occupied by them in a week.

F. WHELER, Brigadier,
Comdg. Saugor District.

From Lieut. C. R. Clemons, comdg. detachment, to the Brig. Major Saugor district.

Dated Camp Narheet, 14th Nov., 1858.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the Brigdr. comdg., that on the morning of the 13th inst., at the request of Lieut. col. Partridge, with a force as per margin,* I marched to act in concert with him against the rebel village of Putna, situated at the foot of a hill, and surrounded by impenetrable jungle, with a fort commanding it above.

2. From information I received, I learned that the strength of the rebels was about 1,500; they had apparently abandoned the village, and had advantageously posted themselves in large numbers in the fort, and among the rocks surrounding it.

3. On the arrival of the detach. within about 400 yards of the hills, and while Col. Partridge, comdg. the force, and Maj. W. Lamb, asst. adjt. gen. Lahore div., who had kindly volunteered his services for the occasion, were reconnoitring the enemy's position, a heavy fire was opened upon them from the fort, upon which Col. Partridge returned to the advanced party, and led them on to the attack, and directed Maj. Lamb to take the reserve through the village, and advance up the other side of the hill.

4. The skirmishers advanced up the hill in a most dashing style, with the usual cheer, driving the enemy with rapidity from rock to rock, and in less than half an hour the outworks and fort were in our possession. The rebels retreating into the dense jungle, were closely followed up; their loss cannot be determined upon with anything like accuracy, on account of the thickness of the jungle, but some bodies were found.

5. I am happy to say that there were no casualties in our detachment.

6. The conduct of officers and men met with my warmest approbation.

C. R. CLEMONS,
Lieut. Comdg. detach.

From Lieut. col. S. H. Partridge, comdg. field detachment, Bombay Army, to Lieut. C. R. Clemons, comdg. field detach., Madras Army.

Dated Camp Narheet, Nov. 13, 1858.

SIR,—A large body of insurgents being reported in the neighbouring hills (said to be 1,500) who are much disturbing the country, it occurs to me that we should hardly be performing our duty to Government without attacking them.

If, therefore, you will favour me with your co-operation to the extent of one hundred and eighty rank and file, half Eur. and half native, I think

SIR,—Our little affair of yesterday against the village and gurhee of Putna being over, and such an example made of the insurgents as will, I hope, lead to their dispersion, will you allow me the liberty of personally congratulating you upon the part taken by yourself, officers, and men in the attack.

As leader of the advance party, we may fairly attribute to you our success in the first place; and the steady conduct of your officers and men under the sharp fire they encountered I myself witnessed.

Capture of the Fort at Simree.

Allahabad, 17th Dec., 1858.

The Rt. Hon. the Gov. Gen. is pleased to direct the publication of the following despatch from Col. Eveleigh, c.b., comdg. a moveable force, reporting his successful attack on the Fort of Simree, in Oude, on the 9th Nov., 1858, and its destruction.

The Gov. Gen. highly approves of the operations of Col. Eveleigh, c.b., and of the conduct of all the officers and men engaged on this occasion:—

To Lieut. Biddulph, Depy. Asst. Adj. Gen.,
Oude Field Force.

Camp at Simree, 12th Nov., 1858.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the maj. gen. comdg. Oude field force, that I started, with the troops named below,* from my place of encampment, near Morar Mow, at six a.m. on the 9th inst., for the purpose of attacking the Fort of Simree.

After half an hour's march I observed the enemy's cav. and inf. in front, who retired, however, on the approach of the column. At some little distance farther on the enemy's inf. again appeared in the jungle and khets, and I therefore directed three comps. of H.M.'s 80th regt. and two comps. of H.M.'s 20th regt. to extend and clear the front, and a comp. of the latter regt. also to search a village to my right, whilst a troop of cav. turned its flank.

During the time these movements were being carried out, Lieut. Chamberlain, comdg. the po. force, informed me that the enemy was moving in considerable strength to my right. Fearing that his object might be to attack my baggage, I sent with that officer some cav., two guns royal art., and two comps. of po. inf.

The enemy, meanwhile, being driven from my immediate front, and hearing considerable firing on the right, I at once halted the column, and, proceeding with the detachs. of the 20th and 80th regts. to Lieut. Chamberlain's assistance, found the enemy's inf. extended in thick jungle and nullahs, and in a position most difficult to approach, even for inf., from the nature of the ground. The fire from the guns and Enfields, however, caused them to retreat after some time, when the inf. advanced, skirmishing through jungle khets and over some deep nullahs, and drove them from a strong position on a hill, where they had previously moved to.

The right flank being thus effectually cleared, I returned to the column about two miles off, whose front was also engaged with the enemy's inf., who were firing on it from the jungle, but were driven off by the effective fire of two guns of horse art. and some inf., the whole under command of Maj. Miller, H.M.'s 80th regt., who had charge of the column during my absence.

Here I remained for more than an hour unable to obtain any correct information as to the direct road to the Simree fort, or its position, but on advancing about half a mile a native pointed to a high tree, and said that the fort was in the jungle 200 yards beyond it; but so dense was the jungle all around that no walls were visible. On proceeding some hundred yards farther on, however, a man was observed standing on a bastion of the fort, just above the jungle, and firing at my party, and Maj. Bruce, who commanded the art. of the force, was of opinion that he could shell it with the mortars.

I therefore ordered the heavy guns to be brought up, together with some inf. and two horse art. guns; the remaining horse art. gun, 4th po. inf., and a comp. of the 20th protect the baggage; and three comps. of the 20th and the two royal art. guns to proceed to a village on my right and rear, to prevent the enemy from the jungle attacking that part.

I then extended two comps. of the 80th and two of the 23rd R.W.F., with the necessary supports, and a reserve of the 7th po. inf., the whole under the command of Maj. Miller.

These I directed to advance and clear the enemy's numerous skirmishers out of the jungle (so as to enable me to approach nearer to the fort), and then to return.

In the meantime the enemy opened fire from two guns in the fort on the art. and inf., which was returned by the two horse art. guns on the left, and a few shots from our 18-pdr. gun.

The skirmishers advanced, driving the enemy before them, and, to their surprise, came most unexpectedly close upon the fort, and observing the wall in one part to be rather low, and a few bushes only in front of a wicket gate, they gave a cheer and rushed boldly on, when the enemy ran bodily from the walls and bastions into the jungle behind.

The advance of the 80th under Capt. Young, and also of the 23rd R. W. F. under Capt. Heigham, excited my warmest admiration.

The whole of the troops behaved most admirably, the infantry and guns skirmishing over a considerable distance, from seven till half-past nine o'clock, and again from eleven till twelve o'clock, through the very worst country I ever saw. They underwent great fatigue with great cheerfulness.

I am happy to say the loss of life on our side was most trifling, only two men killed and one officer and two men wounded.

Two small guns were captured in the fort, together with a considerable quantity of powder, which I required to destroy the fort; also many thousands of percussion caps.

The fort of Simree is exceedingly strong by nature, is situated in a dense jungle running from a mile and a half to three miles on three sides, and the east side, by which I approached, surrounded by a narrow belt of jungle, and a strong abatis completely concealing it.

I beg to enclose a rough sketch of it, made by Dr. Kelsall, her Majesty's 20th regt.

I am unable to ascertain the strength of the enemy, but he was in considerable force.

His loss was not great, but was certainly about 100 men, all sepoy (the natives say 200 were killed); thirty were cut up by the police cavalry under Lieutenant Hawkins, on my left, who found them in full retreat towards Sumkerpore.

I beg to return my thanks to all the officers and troops of the force under my command, especially to Maj. Miller, H.M.'s 80th regt., comdg. inf.; Maj. Bruce, horse art., comdg. the art.; and Capt. Jones, 1st Sikh cav., comdg. the cav.; also to Capt. Lyons, comdg. the 20th regt.; Capt. Heigham, comdg. the 23rd R. W. F.; and Capt. Young, comdg. the 80th regt.; Lieut. Chamberlain, comdg. the pol. force; Lieut. Manderson, in charge of siege train; and to my staff officer, Lieut. Burne, H.M.'s 20th regt.—for the able assistance they afforded me in carrying out my wishes.

I have been busily employed during the last two days, with strong fatigue parties of Europeans and native infantry, destroying the fort, and blowing up the bastions, which I hope will be effectually completed before I march.

Parke's Action at Oodeypore.

From Brigdr. Parke, comdg. Brig. Rajpootana F. F., to the Assist. Adj. gen. Malwa Div.

Camp Oodeypore, on the River Oor,
6th Dec., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to submit for the information of Maj. gen. Michel, C.B., comdg. the Malwa div., the following report of an action fought by the troops under my command as per margin,* with the rebel army under Tantia Topce and Rao Sahib, on the 1st day of Dec., 1858, opposite the town of Oodeypore, on the river Oor.

The town of Oodeypore is situated on the right bank of the river, surrounded by dense jungles and mountains, with the exception of a small, and, comparatively speaking, clear space leading up to the town, on which the rebel army had been encamped. Oodeypore is on the direct road to Baroda, from Hooksee and the eastward.

1. On the 30th Nov. I reached a village called Chandpore, about forty-five miles west of Hooksee, and learnt that the rebel army had only marched from thence that morning to Oodeypore, en route, it was stated, to Baroda and Guzerat. In the evening I left, in hopes of surprising the enemy before he marched the following morning.

2. The night march was through the densest jungle for twenty-two miles, at the end of which the narrow road debouched into a somewhat less thickly-wooded plain, which gradually became more open as we advanced. Our spies here informed me of the proximity of the enemy. Soon afterwards Lieut. Moore, comdg. the advanced guard of the Aden trp. Scinde horse, reported that the enemy's outlying picquets were on the alert, that some of them had been sabred by his men, but that the alarm had been given.

3. I moved rapidly forward to select the most favourable spot for forming the brig., throwing out skirmishers from the 72nd highlanders.

4. The cav., placed under the command of Capt. Buckle, of the 3rd By. cav., and attached to the Guzerat irr. horse, was formed into two lines, in rear of the art. and inf. support. The first line consisted of irr. cav., the second line of H.M.'s 8th hussars and 2nd By. cav.

5. It was exceedingly difficult at first to ascertain the enemy's position, owing to the undulations of the ground and the brushwood, which circumstances, however, had the advantage of concealing the small number of my inf. and guns.

6. The enemy soon appeared, mostly cav., very well mounted, in front and on both flanks, evidently with the intention of opposing our advance.

7. I determined to clear the right flank first. The 2nd regt. of Mahratta horse was accordingly ordered up and made a brilliant charge, capturing a standard, under their gallant commander, Lieut. Kerr, who effectually carried out his orders.

8. I now moved the art. forward, with the highlanders skirmishing on both flanks, under Lieut.

Vesey. The enemy's trumpets sounded the British advance, and he came on with a bold front, but the art. and Enfield rifles opening fire, turned him back; another body now threatened our left flank; I charged front accordingly, the Guzerat horse simultaneously charging to our original front, present right, led by Lieut. Newton, drove the enemy before them to the south, past the town of Oodeypore across the river (shallow with sandy bottom), into the mountains.

9. The art. was rapidly brought up into the new positions and well served by Lieut. Heathorn, who opened fire with canister shot.

10. The ground in our immediate front was much broken between us and the enemy; several small huts, almost concealed from view, were held by matchlockmen on our right; their fire, however, did us no harm. A party of the highlanders, under Lieut. Champion (no troops could behave better), advanced, cleared these hovels, and the enemy now fled past our left, giving an opportunity for an excellent charge by the 8th hussars, under Capt. Clowes; 2nd By. cav., under Capt. Smith, reinforced by a troop of Mahratta horse, under Lieut. Bannerman. This latter troop, being more favourably situated than the others, closed first with the enemy. On this occasion Lieut. Bannerman distinguished himself; his horse was severely wounded.

11. The enemy was now driven across the river (the course of which runs almost in a semi-circle round the town); the opposite side and a small island in the middle of the stream were held by the enemy's inf., of whom a considerable number were killed, many dressed in British uniform with British arms and accoutrements.

12. The cav. followed, killing many, until the remaining fugitives were scattered through the jungles and away into the mountains.

13. In the meantime the Mahratta horse on our original right had pursued a body of the enemy supposed to consist of the 5th Ben. irr. cav., well mounted; several of the killed wore the uniform of that corps. The Aden troop Scinde horse did good service in the same direction.

14. Further pursuit was impossible, not only owing to the country being mountainous and covered on all sides with dense jungles, but the troops had marched upwards of 240 miles between the evening of 21st Nov. and daylight on the morning of 1st Dec., including the passage of the Nerbudda river. The troops had been on the march the whole of the two previous nights.

15. I was aware of the great importance of attacking the enemy with the utmost speed before he reached Baroda, to which place I am convinced he was hastening, recruiting his cav. by the plunder of every horse to be met with.

16. By all accounts from different quarters, I am satisfied that this rebel army was scattered in opposite directions.

17. It is very difficult to form a correct estimate of the numbers of the enemy. From all that I can learn, and from my own observation, I should say about 3,500 or 4,000 men, evidently the best remains of this once numerous body.

18. The loss of the enemy is estimated at about 250 or 300 men. Our own loss has not been heavy.

19. The conduct of the troops has been excellent, not only when engaged with the enemy, but during the fatigues of the late forced marches; provisions also being scarce. The rebels had plundered the village on our route.

20. I am much indebted to Capt. Buckle, 3rd By. cav. and Guzerat horse, for the good service which he has performed, and for the valuable assistance which his knowledge of this part of the country has afforded me. To Capt. Clowes, comdg. trp. 18th hussars, not only on this occasion, but during the whole pursuit of the rebels by the 2nd brig. Rajpootana F. F. To Capt. Smith, comdg. trp. 2nd By. cav. To Lieut. Kerr, comdg. 2nd regt. Southern Mahratta horse. To Lieut. Vesey, comdg. detach. 72nd highlanders. But I consider that Lieut. Heathorn, the non-commissioned officers and men of the Bg. mt. are deserving of special notice, and most strongly do I recommend them to the favourable consideration of H.E. the C. in C., not only for the manner in which they kept up their guns (9-pounders) with cav., but also for the truly soldierlike, cheerful perseverance with which they have undergone extraordinary fatigues and overcome every difficulty. Of Capt. Stewart, maj. of brig. 13th regt. By. N.I., I can speak highly as an attentive deserving officer. Capt. Rice, 72nd highlanders, acted as my orderly officer; as such and as a regimental officer throughout the operations in Rajpootana and the pursuit of the rebels, he has been most useful and assiduous in the discharge of his duty. Assist. surg. Rutler, 72nd highlanders, and Assist. surg. Bell, Southern Mahratta horse, the only two medical officers with the force, paid every care and attention to the sick and wounded.

21. For some months past I was without the assistance of any political officer except Lieut. Burton, assist. suptdnt. at Neemuch, who has accompanied me throughout the pursuit; to him I am much indebted. Without his aid, his thorough knowledge of the native language, and his indefatigable exertions when provisions were scarce, roads almost impassable during the rainy season, transport failing, I believe my brig. would frequently have been unable to move. The information also which he obtained throughout districts with which he was in no ways connected, was generally correct.

22. Having alluded to the conduct of the troops at present under my immediate command, I trust I may be permitted to bring to the notice of the maj. gen. comdg., and through him to that of the C. in C., the services of that portion of the 2nd brig. Rajpootana F.F. which was not present at the action of the 1st Dec., but which has been engaged and has marched upwards of 1,500 miles during the hot, as also during the rainy season, in the pursuit of rebels, throughout the greater part of Rajpootana, through Malwa, and has crossed the eight principal rivers on this side of India, viz., the Banass, Bairass, Chumbul, Colly Scinde, Newuj, Perbutty, Betwah, and the Narbudda (twice), some at much risk and with great difficulty. I avail myself of this opportunity of bearing public testimony to the really soldierlike qualities of these troops.

Operations in Shahabad.

The Rt. Hon. the Gov. Gen. of India in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following despatch from Brig. Douglas, c.b., comg. the districts of Shahabad and Ghazee-pore, reporting operation in Shahabad and the Kymore Hills, from the 19th to the 30th Nov., 1858.

H.E. in Council, in concurring in the approbation expressed by the Rt. Hon. the C. in C., desires to acknowledge the excellent services rendered by Capt. Gordon, of the 42nd Highlanders, on this occasion:—

From Brig. Douglas, c.b., comg. Districts of Shahabad and Ghazee-pore, to the Adj. gen. of the Army.

Army H.Q., Allahabad: Arrah, Dec. 20, 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to state, for the information of the Rt. Hon. the C. in C., that, having received his orders to drive the rebels out of the Kymore Hills, where they had taken refuge after their expulsion from Shahabad, I made arrangements for a hill campaign; and as, in such an extended line of country, it was hopeless attempting to hem in the enemy, who had now separated into several independent parties, I divided my force into seven columns, of about three hundred men each, with a view of intercepting the scattered bodies; and, by following them rapidly, I hoped to thoroughly disorganise or compel them to accept the terms of the amnesty and capitulate. I distributed the troops as follows:—Two columns, under Lieut. cols. Turner, c.b., and Walter, 35th regt., watched the Soane; two columns, under Col. Seymour, 84th regt., and Maj. Carr, Madras rifles, guarded the foot of the hills on the north, with orders to follow up immediately any party that might double back into Shahabad. Another column under Capt. Gordon, 42nd Highlanders, with 150 recruits of the 42nd and 79th Highlanders, and some native levies under Capt. Knyvett were detached to the Mirzapore side; the remaining two columns, one under my own personal command, and the other under Maj. Lightfoot, 84th regt., were for the hills. I placed a detachment under Capt. Browne, 35th regt., at Bhugwanpore, and held the Jugdeespore Jungle with 300 men. I also provided posts for the Grand Trunk road and most important positions in Shahabad. All these arrangements being complete, on the 19th, at sunrise, Maj. Lightfoot's column and my own proceeded to ascend the hills, the former by the Raj Ghat and my own by the Doses Ghat. The ascent was most laborious, the Ghat being precipitate and rugged, and passing through heavy jungle and over and between ledges of huge rocks, which offered a very precarious footing for the provision-animals, whose loads were obliged to be removed and carried up by hand. This was necessarily a tedious operation, and occupied upwards of thirty-six hours. On entering the hills, I found the country ill adapted for military operations; water was scarce, and not unfrequently bad; dense jungle covered the hills, and the roads were mere pathways. No supplies of any kind were procurable, the villages which were few and far between consisting only of from two to six hovels, the inhabitants of which fled at our approach, and of course no trustworthy information could be obtained. As I before stated, the enemy had separated, and they invariably retreated as we advanced, avoiding us in the dense jungle. In this, however, they did not always succeed. Capt. Gordon hearing from Mr. Dennison, magistrate of Mirzapore, who accompanied him, that a considerable body of the rebels were at Kirkhut Ghur, determined to attack them; accordingly on the 20th Nov. with his Highland recruits and the Mirzapore levy he advanced upon the enemy's position just at dawn, took them completely by surprise, killed some fifty, captured their horses, ammunition, &c., and utterly routed them. This affair appears to me to redound greatly to Capt. Gordon's credit, and I have much pleasure in bringing his services to the notice of the Rt. Hon. the C. in C.

On the morning of the 24th, having heard of some rebels within a few miles of my proposed line of march, sending off my baggage under a suitable escort to my new bivouac ground, I proceeded to the point indicated by the guide, but the enemy had fled a few hours before my arrival. That same afternoon I again heard that three hundred rebels had taken up a position near the village of Sulya, Duhar, about ten or twelve miles from my camp. Having found it almost hopeless to bring the enemy to action in the daytime, I decided on attempting a night attack, and with a body of two hundred men from the 35th and 84th Regts. under Capt. Tisdall, 35th, and Capt. Hardy, 84th Regt. set out about eight p.m., timing our march so that we should reach the enemy when the moon arose at midnight. After proceeding about eleven miles through heavy jungle, we came out into an open plain. A fire was observed to our front, under a top of trees. I advanced towards it, extending the L. Comp. 35th Regt. under Capt. Blyth. The order was silence and no firing as we proceeded: other lights appeared, and suddenly within fifty yards of us, one or two persons rose from the ground, followed by several others who began moving silently away. Convinced that the rebel's camp was in front of us, with a cheer and levelled bayonets, the men rushed upon the enemy; so complete was the surprise, that some of the sepoys were bayoneted as they lay, others throw themselves into a nullah hard by, beyond which was heavy jungle, the proximity of which alone saved the whole body from being annihilated. The alarm was so great that not a rebel attempted to stand to his arms. In my telegram I reported forty killed, but I have since learnt that sixty-four bodies, all sepoys, had been found, most of them bayoneted. We captured their ammunition and accoutrements, all their cooking pots and pans, one hundred and thirty muskets, nine Enfields, and some two hundred and fifty swords and shields, and twenty horses of kinds. This successful night attack following so closely on Capt. Gordon's surprise appears to have decided the rebels on leaving the hills. They first attempted a descent by Maj. Carr, but were driven back with loss; subsequently taking advantage of night they stole down the hills in small bodies, avoiding all villages and roads, and about 400 or 500 succeeded in penetrating some distance into the plains before they were discovered. Directly, however, that the information reached Cols. Walter and Seymour, those two officers started in pursuit, which they carried on at the rate of twenty-five and thirty miles a-day. On the 25th Col. Walter had a conference with some of the rebel leaders who appeared inclined to lay down their arms provided they obtained for themselves exemption from all further penalties; but as Mr. Money, who was present at the interview, did not consider that such stipulation could be entertained, the conference was broken off and the enemy retreated. The pursuit was continued till nightfall. That same evening the rebels made for the Ganges, with an intention of crossing, but the steamers which had been warned to be on the alert, opened fire upon them, and every boat having been previously moved to the other side of the river, their object was entirely defeated. Baffled on every side, disheartened by the daily defection of numbers, their adherents, and hotly pressed by the pursuing columns, the rebels, suddenly breaking up, scattered to their homes, many of them abandoning their arms and horses, numbers of which have been brought in by the villagers; so complete was the enemy's dispersion that within a few days not a dozen men throughout the district remained banded together, and the leaders attended by only three or four followers were flying for their lives. In every village in Shahabad sepoys are to be found, but they are no longer in arms, in proof of which numbers are coming in daily to accept the terms of the amnesty. Of those rebels who lately infested this district, I believe that there only remains one small body of about 200 men to be disposed of; they have made across the Soane, and I have sent Lieut. col. Turner, c.b., to try and break them up.

To the officers comdg. columns, to my personal staff, Sir Henry Havelock, 18th Royal Irish regt., Asst. adj. gen. maj. Stephenson, 79th highlanders, brig. major capt. Wilkinson, 4th Eur. lt. cav., deputy asst. qr. mr. gen. to Mr. Bingham, acting magistrate, and Mr. Dennison, magistrate of Mirzapore, and to all who have assisted in the late operations, I return my best thanks. Col. Longden in North Behar, and Maj. Beamish, 35th regt. in Tirhoot, have conducted responsible commands much to my satisfaction. The conduct of Naib Russaldar Nuweb Khan, 3rd Sikh cav., when in command of an outpost, as reported by Col. Seymour, was so gallant that I venture to recommend him for some special mark of favour. I cannot close this report without bearing testimony to the admirable commissariat arrangements made by Capt. Ogilvie, ably assisted by Capt. Holland, Capt. Tulloch, and Lieut. Bates.

CIVIL SERVICE.—It is said that the changes in the civil service, which will almost immediately take place, are as follows:—On the retirement of Mr. B. Colvin, Mr. Trevor will be appointed a permanent judge of the Sudder. Mr. Samuella returns, and will be placed on the permanent bench during the absence of Mr. Torrens. Mr. Pierce Taylor and Mr. Atherton are talked of as temporary judges. Mr. Elliott, the Burdwan commissioner, is about to retire from the service, and Mr. Lushington, of the Revenue Board, is to succeed him. Mr. Fergusson, it is expected, will be the new commissioner of Patna.

A DISGRACEFUL JOB.

WE have seldom, if ever, felt so strongly impelled as at the present moment to write a libel, and a libel every point of which should be a truth. There was a time when the City of London was famed for the high honour of its merchants, when the British trader was recognised in all nations as an upright and honest man, whose word might pass unchallenged, and in whose inmost heart there was no guile. Those times have passed away. Wealth is now more esteemed than a spotless name. Sharp practice is preferred to chivalrous principle; and so long as a man escapes the Old Bailey, he may continue to be respected on 'Change, to sit as chairman of fraudulent and impossible companies, and finally worm his way to a seat in the Imperial Parliament. Every day a disgraceful job of one kind or another is unblushingly perpetrated. Sometimes these dark transactions closely border on positive fraud; at other times they are so ingeniously acute as to be only unpleasantly ambiguous. A very "ugly" affair, for instance, was perpetrated only a few days back by the East India Railway Company, whose directors are assumed to be a highly respectable body of gentlemen. Nevertheless, they coolly lent themselves to a most ill-flavoured job, and have laid themselves open to remarks which must be painfully distressing to any man who values his self-respect and yet retains some sparks of gentlemanly feeling. On the morning of Wednesday, the 16th inst., they announced that they were ready to receive loans on debenture to the amount of one million sterling for five years, bearing interest at the rate of four and a-half per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly by coupon at the Bank of England. The holders of these debentures were further to have the option, at the expiration of twelve months from the date of their bonds, to convert them into extension shares of £20, bearing five per cent. interest, guaranteed as a first charge on the revenues of India—these shares being convertible into stock. It is usual on such occasions to give the original, or previous shareholders, the chance of taking up any additional stock before an appeal is made to the outside public, who have shrunk from bearing the heat and burden of the day. But in the present instance no such notice was given—certainly not in a fair and reasonable manner. The consequence was—as was evidently intended—that the whole of these debentures were taken up by a select few, who no doubt had received timely information of the contemplated operation. By half-past one o'clock the subscription list was filled, and the debentures were then only obtainable at 1½ to 2 premium. It is clear that proprietors of stock, not residing in London, were utterly deprived of an opportunity to put down their names, and even of residents only a few received timely intimation. The only excuse that has been offered in justification of the conduct of the directors is, that they were anxious to raise the money without any unnecessary delay. But it was utterly absurd to imagine that there could be any difficulty in raising so small a sum on such favourable terms. If the directors entertained any such doubts they must have been strangely ignorant of the state of the money market, and have convicted themselves of gross incapacity. We acquit them, however, on that charge. Their conduct was certainly not the result of stupidity or incompetence on mercantile matters. With their eyes open they have perpetrated a job of a most suspicious character, and one that will lower them in the estimation of the public, and in the confidence of the shareholders.

THE NAGERCOIL RIOTS.

THE recent disturbances in the semi-independent State of Travancore appear to have originated in social rather than in religious causes. The inhabitants of that district are divided into two distinct classes—the Nairs, who are Soodras, and the Shanars, who are Devil-worshippers. The latter have stood for ages on the lowest round of the Hindoo social system, or, rather, have been regarded as aliens to humanity. They were forbidden to carry an umbrella—the shadow of a Shanar falling upon a Nair was held to be pollution—their women were compelled to go naked from the waist upwards. The humiliations to which they were subjected naturally led them to welcome with gladness the mild doctrines of Christianity, and to embrace a faith which offered consolation to the oppressed, and taught that all men were equal in the eyes of the Creator. Many of them, therefore, became converts to a religion that raised them out of the mire, and as a consequence of their newly-acquired self-respect they learned to feel the outrage offered to decency in the compulsory nudity of their women. Instead, however, of devising a new style of garment, they thought proper to assume the costume peculiar to the Nairs. It was, in fact, as if the City 'prentices a hundred years ago had donned the garb of "fine gentlemen," and worn a rapier by their side. Had they presumed to do so, we may be sure no long time would have elapsed before they would have been called upon to test their cunningness of fence against the Bucks and Mohawks at "the polite end" of the town. The Nairs acted as the Mohawks would have done, and a serious riot ensued. This was in 1829, when the reins of Government were held by a female hand. The Ranee, however, was a woman of sense and firmness, and, after consulting the British Resident, she issued an edict forbidding the use of the upper cloth to the Hindoo Shanars, but permitting the Christian converts to wear a tight-fitting jacket. This regulation appears to have given general satisfaction at the time, but of late years the Shanars of South Tinnevely have gradually come to wear the cloth which was interdicted to their brethren in Travancore. In an evil moment the latter chose to follow the example of their neighbours, and to set at defiance the prohibitory edict of 1829. Exasperated by this second encroachment upon their social distinctions, the Nairs have again taken the law into their own hands and disturbed the peace of the country. Not content with punishing what they considered the insolence of the Hindoo Shanars, they extended their wrath to the Christian converts also, and tore from the persons of the women the jackets they were clearly entitled to wear. It is said, they attempted to justify their violence by the Royal Proclamation, which they imagine to be hostile to the diffusion of Christianity. They accordingly testified their appreciation of the transfer of the Indian Government from the Company to the Crown by firing the Missionary Chapels and the huts of the converted Shanars. Thus, while in this country the East-India Company were assailed and reviled for their apathy on religious matters, they incurred the distrust of the natives of Hindostan by their presumed leaning towards the followers of the Christian faith. The excesses of the Nairs were not, however, allowed to pass unnoticed. The Dewan, Madava Rao, instantly repaired to the scene of the disturbances, and, with equal hand distributing praise and blame, soon restored order and tranquillity. The Shanar Hindoos were censured for violating ancient usages and the edict of 1829, and the Nairs were severely rebuked for acting contrary to law and breaking the peace. The Dewan appears to have displayed both moderation and firmness, and to have dispersed by his admirable tact and discretion the elements of a disastrous and permanent misunderstanding.

It is not altogether inappropriate to mention in this place that the Madras Government have approved of Mr. Levinge's conduct in calling out the military at Tinnevely, and have given instructions that the rioters apprehended on that occasion shall be prosecuted with the utmost rigour.

H.M.'s OFFICERS AND THE "TIMES."

TRULY a strange and marvellous region is the land of the "mild Hindoo." If the days of romance have passed away never to return, those of fable still remain to us. Henceforth, we may no longer regard as a poetic fiction the story of Circe's island and the transformation of the comrades of Ulysses into grovelling swine. The same thing occurs in Hindostan in these our own times. English officers and Christian gentlemen—the Times hath said it, and the Times is an honourable journal—no sooner set foot on that blood-stained soil, no sooner breathe that foul, polluted atmosphere, than their inmost nature becomes changed, and they find themselves metamorphosed into cruel, remorseless tigers, or mischievous baboons. Only a few months ago public feeling was outraged by Mr. Russell's sweeping accusations against English magistrates and officers in India—those at head quarters alone being excepted. They were represented as exulting in bloodshed, as gloating over the sufferings of their fellow-creatures, and as personally indulging in acts of wanton insult and oppression. Three or four instances were adduced, though on very doubtful authority, to justify these serious charges against a body of educated English gentlemen, and the Times improved the occasion by administering a sharp rebuke to those who were thus hastily assumed to be guilty. That squall passed over, but now another dark cloud comes sweeping up from the horizon, yet more threatening than the former. It is alleged that officers of the royal army not unfrequently requite the hospitality of native princes and gentlemen by "a general smash of the furniture;" and that soldiers sent to a native house on an amicable mission are seen coming away with silver ornaments in their possession, which they could only have obtained through "strong persuasion." The latter statement is clearly false, because no man would venture to display the proofs of his own guilt. The natives, too, are by no means so patient of wrong as to hesitate to denounce to the proper authorities any misconduct of this kind; nor do they entertain any especial reverence for the European soldier, apart from his fighting capacities. We may rest assured that if any silver ornaments were surrendered for the moment through dread of personal injury, not many hours would elapse before a formal complaint would be lodged with the commanding officer of the regiment, or with the nearest civil magistrate.

Upon the subject of the vile charge made against her Majesty's officers it is difficult to write with becoming temper and moderation. It should be sufficient, one would think, to appeal to the long-established character of the English army, and to the high tone that pervades English society at the present day. But mean, malignant natures, while they greedily welcome every evil imputation against their neighbours, without asking for the shadow of a proof, are seldom willing to accept a denial, unless it be supported by almost legal evidence. This, of course, cannot be obtained, because a negative cannot be proved. The assertion, that not a hint has been received as to such reprehensible misdoings, can always be met by the counter-assertion that positive information exists to the contrary. But if the Times really believed in the truth of the libellous insinuations it has published to the world, it was bound, in common fairness to the innocent, to mention at least one instance of the misbehaviour it so severely reprobated. No dates, no localities even, are given. There is not a single clue afforded whereby the truth of these allegations might be traced, or, rather, their utter groundlessness discovered and exposed. We may presume, indeed, from the allusion to the Lord Sahib, that the assumed irregularities took place at Lucknow—they certainly could not have happened at Allahabad. But as the natives were well aware of Lord Clyde's serious indisposition, it is not very likely that they could have expected to be honoured and protected by his presence at their entertainments. Besides, is it probable that if the European guests smashed the furniture of any one native gentleman, another would incur a similar catastrophe? And yet we read in the letters of correspondents to the Indian papers, and also in private communications to friends in this country, that several banquets have been given by native bankers and others, and that everything passed off to the perfect satisfaction of both the hosts and the guests. That any riotous conduct should have occurred at the entertainments of "Indian Princes" is still more improbable, because on such occasions some senior officers and magistrates would certainly be present, who would take care not to be implicated in anything that was unseemly and disgraceful. But, says the Times, reports of such proceedings have been received from many quarters. Are we then to understand that the actors in those scenes have gloried in their own shame to such a degree that they have sent the details to their friends at home? or were these confessions wrung from them by remorse? If not the actors themselves, then those who did circulate such rumours could only have spoken from hear-say; and it is on such grounds as these that the most influential journal in the world is willing to brand the hitherto fair name of British officers, and to hold up to universal contempt and derision the members of an honourable, chivalrous, and gentlemanly profession.

THE COMPENSATION QUESTION.

ON the 2nd of December, 1857, the Court of Directors issued instructions to their Governor General to "procure information and collect evidence regarding claims to compensation for losses of property and effects caused by the mutiny and the general disorder consequent thereupon." Five months after this despatch was forwarded, or on the 1st of May, 1858, the Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor General was "desired to request that measures may be adopted by the Government, North-West Provinces, for giving effect to the wishes of the honourable Court of Directors." All claims not exceeding 50,000 rupees in value were to be sent in within three months from the above date, and all claims in excess of that amount within six months. The six months expired on the 1st of November, but other two months having elapsed without any apparent results, the Secretary to the Calcutta Compensation Committee was instructed to inquire of the Government of India if any or what progress had been made in investigating the claims of sufferers. This application was made in the following terms:—

To G. F. Edmonstone, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor General.
2, Old Post Office-street, Jan. 6, 1859.

Sir,—I am directed by the Committee for the Registration of Claims to Compensation, to state that their attention has been drawn by various claimants to the great length of time which has elapsed since their claims were registered and sent in; and that, in common with the sufferers generally, the committee is becoming anxious for some substantial progress towards a settlement. Adverting to his lordship's notification in the Gazette in May, the committee observe that the hon. the Court of Directors desired the Government of India to investigate the nature and extent of loss of property, the hon. Court reserving to itself the decision whether compensation should be given. With reference to this I am directed to ask for information (which I very respectfully beg now to do) respecting that investigation; whether it has commenced; to what extent it has proceeded; under what orders or rules (if any) as respects mode of investigation and evidence to be taken, and whether the Government will give the claimants, or this committee as representing them, a statement of results individually as respects each separate claim, or collectively as respects the whole. They also would be glad to know whether any opportunity will be given to claimants to support their claims in the usual way of claims, to be ascertained in a quasi judicial manner or with quasi judicial results, and whether the Government has made any report on the nature and extent of the loss to the Government at home.

I beg to add that any further information which can be given (but which it does not occur to me to specify) will be most gratefully received and acknowledged by the committee.

(Signed) W. THEOBALD,
Secretary to the Compensation Committee.

Mr. Theobald's letter elicited what in vulgar parlance would be styled a "grumpy" reply:—

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

From R. Simson, Esq., Under Secretary Government of India, with the Governor General, to W. Theobald, Esq., Secretary to the Compensation Committee.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th inst.

2. In reply, I am desired by the Right Honourable the Governor General to inform you that investigations of claims for losses resulting from the late disturbances have been finished in the N. W. Provinces, the Punjab, Oude, Central India, and Rajpootana; and that reports, for the most part complete, have been submitted to this Government. The investigation in Bengal, it is believed, is also finished. A copy of the instructions under which these investigations have been conducted is enclosed.

3. His lordship, I am to observe, does not consider it necessary, in the present state of the case, to communicate to the Compensation Committee a statement of results, either individually or collectively.

4. As regards an opportunity being given to claimants of supporting their claims, I am to state that no reply can be returned until a decision on the main question is taken by the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India.

5. I am desired to add that a general report will be sent to H.M.'s Government as soon as the local reports are quite complete.

G. R. SIMSON,
Under Secy. Govt. of India, with the Governor
Allahabad, Jan. 16th, 1859. General.

The "main question" on which the decision of the Secretary of State is so patiently awaited by the Viceroy is, we presume, the question whether or not any title to compensation on the part of the claimants shall be recognised by the Government. If such be the case, the fact of the inquiry into the nature and extent of the losses sustained in itself establishes the principle of right. The Court of Directors affected to reserve their decision on this point, but their self-importance must have led them widely astray if they imagined that a fruitless investigation would not be regarded and resented as an intolerable impertinence. Sir John Lawrence, with characteristic honesty of purpose and promptitude of action, spared his honourable masters the trouble of coming to a decision so far as the Punjab was concerned. The course of conduct he pursued is thus set forth in paragraph 134 of the Punjab Report for 1857-58:—

The principle that the value of property of Christians, or of the British Government, plundered, damaged, or destroyed should be recovered from the villages or the individuals who did the mischief, is being enforced throughout the whole territory, excepting the Delhi district itself, and its extension to that district also has been recommended to the Supreme Government. Penal fines under the new legislative enactment are being levied from the offending villages in all the districts. Ultimately, it is hoped that the sums levied from offenders will suffice to reimburse all the Christian sufferers in the Delhi territory.

This principle has long since been recognised in this country, and is, indeed, the law of the land. It is not, in fact, impugned at the East India House. The usual answer to inquiries in that quarter is not that any doubt is entertained as to the necessity of making good the losses inflicted upon European and native residents in India by their appointed defenders and protectors, but that nothing can be done until the preliminary information has been received from the Government of India. From Mr. Simson's letter it may be inferred that the desired information would be forwarded very shortly after the 16th of January. We trust, therefore, that this question will now be settled in a just and liberal spirit, without any ungracious delay. An exhausted exchequer is, no doubt, unfavourable to the entertainment of propositions for an extraordinary expenditure; but economy must not be allowed to stand as a bar to justice. Besides, the amount awarded as compensation will naturally be levied in the shape of fines on the towns and districts in which property was pillaged or destroyed.

THE LATE CAPT. MACKENZIE, 3RD BOMBAY L.C.

We understand that a very handsome tablet has recently been erected in St. Paul's Cathedral, Edinburgh, to the memory of the late Captain Thomas Allan Mackenzie, of the 3rd Regiment Bombay Light Cavalry, by the officers of that gallant corps. It bears the following inscription:—"Sacred to the memory of Thomas Allan Mackenzie, captain in the 3rd Regt. Bombay Cavalry, who departed this life at Bombay on the 3rd of October, 1856, in the 37th year of his age. He was a distinguished and gallant soldier, a cheerful and kind-hearted comrade, an attached and generous friend. This tablet, to the memory of one so beloved and lamented by all who knew him, is erected by his brother officers, with whom he passed nineteen years of his life, including active field service in Scinde and Afghanistan, where he most gallantly fought and bled."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MARCH 18. THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

LORD CLANRICARDE moved for a copy of the answer of the Governor General of India to the secret despatch of the 19th of April, 1858, with the reply of the Secretary of State and subsequent correspondence on the subject; and also of her Majesty's Proclamation to the people of India. He also asked whether the talookdars and chiefs who now possess land in Oude have not had those lands granted or restored to them, in conformity with the Proclamation of the Governor General of the 3rd March, 1858, and if not, under what tenure the landowners in Oude hold their estates. He thought that, from what was at present going on in the settlement of Oude, the Governor General had not receded from the policy of his despatch of March, 1858; for, although sparingly, yet confiscation in some few cases had been enforced. If such was the case, by what tenure did the talookdars hold their estates? The fact was, that the Government of India had assumed the proprietorship of the soil, and that, in consequence, the land was now held by an Imperial tenure, or, as it might be called, a Parliamentary title.

LORD DENBY vindicated the course pursued by the Government. Lord Canning had not changed his policy, but had modified it; for instead of confiscations being made the rule, as the proclamation would have led the people to believe, they had been the exceptions. The Government had the greatest confidence in Lord Canning, as was shown by the tone of their despatches, and perhaps more so by their having recommended him to her Majesty, who had already conferred on him the Grand Cross of the Bath, for advancement in the peerage. In regard to the tenure of the land in Oude, there had been no grant from the Crown, but it was held under the terms of the proclamation of amnesty and forgiveness. In this manner the proprietors had entered on their original property, from which they had been expelled in 1857; and by this means the best possible effect had been produced in the country. The papers moved for should be laid before the House.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH said that the confiscation never had taken place, as was proved by an order of Lord Clyde, dated eight months after the Proclamation, requiring the inhabitants of Oude to bring in their arms, and threatening the landowners in case of refusal with confiscation of their estates. All that had been done was a re-settlement of the land after the summary settlement. If her Majesty's Proclamation were bona fide carried out, the best results, he thought, might be prophesied.

LORD HARDWICKE thought the Government had been right in the measures it had adopted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 18. INDIA.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL asked whether, as it appeared that the pacification of Oude was complete, and the revolt in India quelled, it was the intention of her Majesty's Ministers to propose a vote of thanks to the Governor-General and Lord Clyde, and to the other officers, civil and military, who had distinguished themselves in the late great and glorious campaign? He should have left this matter in the hands of the Government but for certain papers which had been laid upon the table of the House. He had read with wonder the cold and sneering tone of the despatch of the 9th of December to the Governor-General of India.

Mr. KINNAIRD inquired whether some distinguished mark of honour would not be conferred upon Sir John Lawrence?

Lord STANLEY assured the House that the Government fully appreciated the great services rendered by Sir John Lawrence; but he did not admit that they had not been recognised. He recapitulated the rewards and marks of distinction which had been conferred upon Sir John. In reply to Lord J. Russell, he said it was the intention of the Government to propose a vote of thanks to the officers, civil and military, including the Governor General and the Commander in Chief, who had taken a prominent part in the operations in India.

Lord PALMERSTON said he deeply regretted that Lord Stanley should have felt it his duty, as a Minister of the Crown, to write the sneering, ironical despatch to Lord Canning of the 9th of December.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL AND COUNCIL OF INDIA.

The following "copy of a despatch from Lord Canning, Governor General of India, dated from Allahabad, vindicating his Council in India in respect to certain unfavourable comments made on their conduct in this country," was published on Saturday:—

"Home Department, Allahabad, July 6, 1858. To the Hon. the Court of Directors of the East India Company.

"Hon. Sirs.—It has caused me much regret and pain to observe that upon more than one occasion during the recent discussion in Parliament upon Indian affairs it has been alleged that the Governor General has not received from the members of the Council of India that decided and effective support which, in the difficulties by which the Government of the country has been surrounded, he might have expected to receive.

"2. This has been expressed in different terms; but, however expressed, it is so contrary to fact, and so unjust to those with whom, as colleagues, I have had the pleasure and advantage to act, that I trust I may be allowed to place on record my distinct denial of the allegation.

"3. A general charge can be met only by a general denial; and were the charge directed against myself, I should not have troubled your hon. Court with any notice of it. But it is directed against others whom I best can vindicate; and therefore I desire to say that the support which I received from my hon. colleagues, all and each, from the first beginning of the mutinies up to the time when I left Calcutta and became separated from the Council, was constant and zealous, and that it was uniformly given with that frankness and independence of judgment without which co-operation in Council is worthless.

"4. I am the more anxious to say this, because, since I left Calcutta, two most valuable servants of your hon. Court—my respected friends Maj. gen. Low and Mr. Dorin—have retired from the Council of India and returned to England.

"5. Their final separation from the Government of India makes it especially incumbent upon the head of that Government to be careful that no injustice which it is in his power to avert shall be done to their past honourable services.—I have, &c.,

"CANNING."

THE LATE COLONEL TAIT, C.B.

Our columns announce the death of Colonel Tait, C.B., and Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, which took place on Wednesday evening, at the residence of his brother, the Bishop of London, in St. James's-square. Colonel Tait was well known in India as the commander for many years of the 3rd Bengal Irregular Cavalry, which, as "Tait's Horse," was much distinguished, and did good service in General Pollock's expedition to Cabul, and in the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns. Colonel Tait commanded his Irregulars at the battles of Tiseen and Mammoo Kale, under Pollock; at Ferozepore, under Littler, when besieged by the whole Sikh army; and under Hardinge and Gough at the battles of Ferozeshah, Ramnugger, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat. He entered the service as an infantry cadet in 1825, but before long he received a staff appointment in the Irregular Cavalry, and after some years he was appointed to the command of the 3rd, which he continued to hold until 1851, when he for the first time returned to this country. He had the honour of C.B. conferred on him while in India, and after coming home he was made a Queen's aide-de-camp. He returned to India in 1856, but was compelled by severe illness again to come home, about two months before the late troubles commenced. No one understood better than Colonel Tait how to gain the affections of those under his command, and at the same time to maintain perfect discipline; and, during the late mutiny, he had the satisfaction of learning that a large proportion of the troops formerly under him had remained true to their salt. Colonel Tait was appointed a member of the Royal Commission for the reorganisation of the army of India; and although continuing to suffer from the malady which had driven him home, he attended most of the meetings up to the signing of the report, about a week before his death. Colonel Tait had not retired from the service, and cherished the hope that he would be able again to resume active duty in India.—Times.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

THE EAST INDIA COMPANY v. ROBERTSON AND OTHERS.—THE CIVIL SERVICE IN INDIA.

This case came before their lordships as an appeal from a decree of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, the respondent being Mr. Andrew Robertson, a member of the civil service in the Presidency of Madras. He was a subscriber to the Madras Civil Service Fund, which was established in 1787. Having been subsequently altered and regulated, it became, in 1825, subject to new rules, which were brought into operation with the sanction of the East India Company, which supported it with an annual donation. These new rules were framed with the assent of the general body of subscribers, including the respondent; and the fund was afterwards designated as the Madras Civil Service Annuity Fund. The respondent became entitled to an annuity in 1842, but he did not seek to enforce his claim until 1852, when the secretary offered him an annuity of £1,000 under various conditions, one of them being, that he should pay the difference between the value of the annuity for his life and the accumulated value of his previous contributions. The respondent, in reply to inquiries whether, should he accept the annuity, the amount of his subscription in excess of the amount payable for the annuity would be refunded to him by the trustees of the fund, was informed it would not, as a despatch of the Court of Directors, dated August, 1851, prohibited the refunding of excess of subscriptions unless the existing state of the Annuity Fund permitted of it, which it did not at present; the order, as expressed by the Honourable Court of Directors, being, that "refund of excess of subscriptions beyond one-half the value of annuities is in no case to be made at the expense of the Government." Under these circumstances the respondent declined to accept the annuity; but in 1854 he did accept it, under protest, and with a full reservation of all his rights. He retired from the Civil Service in 1855, and in 1857 he filed a bill against the Hon. East India Company and the trustees of the fund, to recover 30,000 rupees, being the excess of his subscriptions over the half value of his annuity, with interest. The Court, after hearing the cause, made a decree to the following effect:—That the East India Company should pay the respondent 44,000 rupees, that they should pay him an annuity of £1,000, and further, that they should pay his costs. Against this decree the company appealed on these grounds: First, that by the rules of the fund no such excess as was claimed by the respondent was payable by the company. Secondly, that they had only agreed to allow 6 per cent. upon the balance of the fund, and to contribute as much as with the subscriptions and fines would make up the number of annuities to be granted; whereas if the court maintained the claim of the respondent, the company would be liable to refund to all subscribers in a similar position. Thirdly, that their chief object in contributing to the fund, which was to induce senior civil servants to resign earlier, so as to make way for juniors, thus securing the services of Europeans in the most active period of their lives, would be defeated by the system of refunding. Fourthly, that they should not be held liable for a deficiency in the assets of the fund created by the payment of such refunds by the trustees. And fifthly, that the right of the respondent (if it ever existed) was taken away by the new rules framed in 1853 by the subscribers, with the full sanction of the court of directors.

For the respondent it was urged that the various dispatches of the court of directors proved a contract on their part with the subscribers that four annuities should be annually provided for four retiring subscribers to the fund upon payment by each of them of not less than half the value of his annuity; that there had been a practice which rendered it binding on the company to refund to subscribers the excess of their subscriptions above the half value of their annuities; and that the right of a respondent to a refund could not be affected by any alteration of the rules subsequent to his assension of his rights.

On behalf of the trustees, who are the other respondents in the case, it was contended that if the respondent succeeded in establishing his right to the refund, the company were liable to make good any deficiency, as the fund was virtually the fund of the East India Company.

Sir R. Bethell, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. H. Melvill, were counsel for the appellants; Mr. R. Palmer and Mr. C. R. Freeing for the respondent Robertson; and Mr. Rolt and Mr. Mackeson for the trustees.

CHAPLAINS FOR INDIA.—Lord Stanley having placed one of the new Indian chaplaincies at the disposal of St. John's College, Cambridge, the appointment has been spontaneously offered by the Master to the Rev. Augustus V. Hadley, B.A., Fellow of St. John's College, and Senior Wrangler at the Bachelor of Arts' commencement in January, 1856. So far the object of the new Secretary of State for India, which is to secure the services of superior men in every department of the administration, is thus attained. It is, as yet, unknown whether Mr. Hadley will accept the appointment or not, a brief interval for "consideration" being allowed by the authorities. The chaplains about to be appointed by Lord Stanley will be required to serve in India seventeen years, with a furlough of three years at the expiration of the first seven. The salary is about £600 a-year; but the retiring pensions, considering the length and very arduous character of the service, are deemed rather too low.

MR. HYDE CLARKE, agent for the British settlers in the Darjeeling country, in Northern Bengal, had an interview with Lord Stanley on Thursday, the 17th, at the East India House, to present a memorial from the inhabitants of Darjeeling in favour of a guarantee to the Northern Bengal Railway.

DIRECT CADETS.—The following gentlemen having obtained nominations, passed the required examination for Direct Cadets on the 15th inst.: R. T. Chapman, C. W. Ellis, H. E. Kensit, N. M'Allum, C. R. Bradstreet, J. L. Fagan, E. C. Horsford, G. E. Reade.

THE JEWELS OF COMMISSIONER YEH.—Mary Leah, a young girl, nineteen years of age, in the service of Mrs. Emily Bates, No. 7, Dover-road, was charged at the Southwark Police Court, on Saturday, with stealing a brilliant worth £300, a ruby and an emerald of considerable value, supposed to have been the property of the Chinese Commissioner Yeh. It appeared from the evidence of Mrs. Bates that her husband, an engineer on board H.M.S. Essex, serving on the China Seas, some time since sent her the jewels. She charged the girl with stealing them from her looking-glass drawer, together with two worked collars. The collars were found on the prisoner when searched, but the jewels were afterwards found in another drawer hidden away. As the collars were found on the prisoner, for stealing them she was sentenced to two months' hard labour.

THE ARMIES OF THE GREAT POWERS

By LASCELLES WRAXALL.

The information he (Mr. Wraxall) is able to lay before his readers comes rather opportunely at the present hour, when continental ambassadors are summoned from Paris to attend our Cabinet Councils, and every day we hear louder rumours of a general European war. The information that our author is enabled to lay before his readers, though only, perhaps, an approximation to the truth, is particularly valuable at the present time.—Leader.

No work could possibly be more opportune, or more likely to be in general request at the present moment. Mr. Wraxall does not confine himself, indeed, to a simple Homeric catalogue of the forces each State can bring into the field, although even this would be worth knowing on the brink of a general war. He goes far beyond a dull recital of figures, and comments with an air of easy authority on the peculiar characteristics of Austrians, Prussians, English, French, Sardinians, Russians, and Turks. The author appears, moreover, to speak from personal knowledge and experience. He has seen with his own eyes the troops whose good and bad qualities he impartially describes; and during the Crimean war he enjoyed many opportunities of judging from personal observation of the comparative excellence of the forces warring in the Thracian Chersonese. The result is a most useful and compendious work, at all times interesting, but especially so when the question of peace or war is trembling in the balance. No young officer's kit can be considered complete without this key to the relative homicidal properties of the European Powers.—National Standard.

He has certainly given us an apparently complete and concise analysis of the chief European armies, and so far he is entitled to our thanks and approbation.—Literary Gazette.

A very readable and instructive volume. But better than his opinions are his facts. His description of the Austrian, Russian, Prussian, French, Sardinian, and Turkish armies is exact and interesting. He is also very accurate in his delineation of the composition and details of the British and Anglo-Indian armies.—United Service Gazette.

A more reasonable contribution to current literature than Mr. Lascelles Wraxall's account of "The Armies of the Great Powers" cannot be imagined. In an octavo volume he has condensed all the information every one desirous to possess on the subject of the armaments of the great military powers—and he is a most reliable guide. Their means of aggression or defence are set forth clearly and perspicuously, and aim at a glance the general reader is enabled to form a correct idea of the relative chances of success in the event of a protracted war. Not only the numerical strength of each army is given, but also the fullest details of its organization. The different systems of discipline, the dress and accoutrements, the rewards and punishments, and the general internal economy of the European armies, are described in plain language.—Leeds Times, March 5.

of thirty years, during which time upwards of 400,000 cases of cure have been effected. The Hygienic agents throughout the world are unanimous upon the Hygienic system of medicine introduced by James Morison, the Hygienist, who not only taught the public how to cure their own ailments, but also rescued the world from the dangers of false medical doctrines.
The monument lately raised to his memory, by a penny sub-

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

Sudden changes of temperature have frequently a most injurious effect upon the skin, and also upon the nervous system. Hence the prevalence of erysipelas, blotches, biles, rheumatism, and sore throat. Fortunately in Holloway's Ointment and Pills we have the means of promptly removing this class of disease. These wonderful remedies not only suppress the inflammation, but expel the cause of it, by a gentle excretion through the pores, and thoroughly invigorate the whole system, so that patients who have given Holloway's Ointment and Pills a fair trial are often delighted to find that when their disease is vanquished, they are in better health than they even were before. Directions are affixed to each box and pot.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unattainable; and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldonsquare, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This publication stands on quite a different ground from the other monthlies, and affects no rivalry with them. We beg to add our own recommendation to those it has already received. Though the conductors disclaim the idea of filling any vacuum, they certainly do so. They evidently also possess good information, and deal with most of their topics in a serious and searching spirit.—Press, March 5, 1859.

If it proves to be, what from the first number seems likely, a publication appealing more to the higher class of readers, whose wants are at present only supplied by the Quarterly Reviews, its chances of success will certainly be very considerable. There is no conceivable reason why articles written by and addressed to thoughtful men should only make their appearance four times in the twelvemonth, but, on the contrary, every reason to suppose that a monthly collection of such would meet with a ready and extensive sale. The purely political articles are on "Indian Finance" and "Parliament and the People," the last, especially, very ably written.—Globe, March 2, 1859.

First of all, let us bid welcome to the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," published by Messrs. Allen and Co., of 7, Leadenhall-street. It is sought to establish a sort of English "Revue des deux Mondes." This design is strictly carried out.—Literary Gazette, March 5, 1859.

Its articles, which are of a thoroughly miscellaneous character, are promising enough.—John Bull, March 5, 1859.

It is a new monthly magazine, that brings itself modestly into the world without any flaming announcement of the wonders it intends to do. . . . We are very glad to see in the first number a quality which gives it a full title to existence, viz., good sense, as opposed to the ordinary affectation of omniscience, superciliousness, or an unflagging vis comica. . . . We welcome any novelty in literature which promises to be sensible, well-informed, and gentlemanlike. There are several articles of merit in this number. That on "Literature and Life" is perhaps the best. Its remarks on Mr. B. Hope's notion of making literature a profession are perfectly sound. The very clever and much-wanted article against the silliness of our present Christmas pieces for the stage should be read by all who fancy they like going to see such things. The article on "Parliamentary Reform" we have had occasion to notice elsewhere; that on "Indian Finance" deserves attention; and that on "Hallam" is sure to get it without deserving it so much.—Spectator, March 5, 1859.

The first number of a new monthly publication, the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," deserves a cordial welcome. Professedly based upon the plan of the "Revue des deux Mondes," it exhibits much of the scholarly spirit, the freedom and independence of thought, and the thorough geniality of tone, which mark its distinguished prototype. The opening article on "Literature and Life" is remarkable, hitting the case to a nicety, taking the middle course between the reckless Mohockism of Bohemia, and the affected kid-glove refinement of the Saturday Review. All the articles are excellent; but I would specially point out a well-deserved attack on "Christmas Pieces," a biographical notice of "Hallam," and a review of Owen Meredith's "Wanderer."—Literary Lounger in the Illustrated Times, March 5, 1859.

Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. have just brought out the first number of a monthly periodical, called the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW of Politics, Literature, and Social Science." We confess that until we read this first number we had no very clear impression that we were in need of any addition to our already heavily-laden monthly literature; but a careful examination of the contents of the work has satisfied us that its projectors are justified in the undertaking. If they cannot be said, in the slang of the book-market, to have supplied a want, there is little doubt that they will create an audience. The best brief notion we can give of the publication is to say that it promises to become to the English reader what the Revue des deux Mondes is to the French, with an indefinitely wider latitude of topics and freedom of opinion. The critical element predominates, but it admits of the essay in its pure form, and is sufficiently elastic in both departments to embrace every variety of subject of current or permanent interest. In politics it ranges with the progressive section of the Conservative party, which would preserve the constitution by adapting it from time to time to the necessities of successive epochs. The soundness of its judgment on the question of Parliamentary Reform is displayed in the ablest and most thoroughly constitutional article that has yet appeared in any of our periodicals on the subject—an article which acquires additional value from the fact that it foreshadowed the whole of the scheme of the Government two days before the Reform Bill was brought forward. In social law and morals, the object of the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" will be to note the progress and collect the results of all movements tending towards the advancement or elucidation of those vague philosophical investigations which are clustered under the general head of social science. Good earnest is given of the resources at the command of the writers, and of the practical manner in which they are prepared to deal with them, in an excellent article on the "Homeless Poor." There are also capital papers upon "Russia" and "Indian Finance," and some admirable literary articles. This last department is pervaded by a spirit of independence, and a high scholarly tone, which we trust "custom" may not impair. Let us have at least one English periodical, written with integrity and good taste, to which we may confidently look for fearless and honest opinions. The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" promises to realise those expectations, and we heartily wish it the success which it deserves.—Home News, March 3, 1859.

It may with truth be said of it (the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW"), that the opening number promises well. There is a good healthy, manly tone about it (no small thing), and literary ability of no common order. We heartily wish it success.—Overland Mail, March 3, 1859.

The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" seems to combine, in an eminent degree, the amusement of the monthlies and the grave literature of the quarterly reviews. We regret that we cannot devote more space to the work, for we could not praise it more than its merits deserve.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette.

The papers are well written.—Patriot.

All the articles are written in an unaffected, free, and genuine style, on subjects of general current interest, not of common place material. The article on "Henry Hallam" is made truly interesting.—National Standard.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE latest date from Calcutta is the 23rd February. Military operations are confined to two quarters, both sufficiently distant from the Presidency. In the Nepal Terai, Brigadier Horsford fell in with the rebel horde that still follow the fortunes of the Begum and the Nana, on the 10th February, and captured fourteen guns and a mortar. The fugitives are computed to number about 3,000 souls, but it is probable that they will gradually melt away rather than incur the risk of being enclosed between Jung Bahadoor's Ghoorkas, Brigadier Horsford's little army, and the Gorkhpoore column under Colonel Kelly.

The only other direction in which the British troops are still actively engaged is in the neighbourhood of Bikaner. Four light columns are there in the field, under the command of Brigadiers Showers, Honner, and Parke, and Colonel Holmes. The object of their pursuit is, of course, Tantia Topee, who leads them on, like Robin Goodfellow, over "bush, brake, and scaur," ever seemingly almost within their grasp: but when they stretch forth their hand to seize him, behold!

he is reported miles away on their right flank or their left, or, perchance, is marching straight away in their rear.

In Oude, Mr. Montgomery has been succeeded by Mr. Wingfield as Chief Commissioner. The police force organised by the former does not appear to be popular, owing to the alleged inexperience of the officers and the low caste of the privates. The former objection will be mitigated day by day, while we trust that no undue importance will be attached to the latter. It is reported that Mr. Wingfield has promised to give a fair trial to the system inaugurated by his predecessor, though it is one little in favour with the civilians of the old school, who have always been consistently, if erroneously, opposed to the restoration of a native aristocracy.

In the commercial circles of Calcutta and Bombay great excitement is stated to prevail in consequence of the financial projects of the Government. At one time the Five per Cents. were at 16 discount, and the Four per Cents. at 25 discount, but within a few days previous to the departure of the Mail the former rose to 12½ discount, and the latter in proportion. On the 19th of February the Bengal Chamber of Commerce held a meeting, which was numerously attended, and agreed to address a letter to the Financial Secretary, which will be found in another column. This letter has also been forwarded by the present Mail to the Secretary of State for India. Apparently in reply to this address the Government published, two days afterwards, the financial measures which had been "resolved upon, in order to provide means for carrying on the public service in the coming year 1859-60." We shall here content ourselves with referring our readers to this important document, which appears in another part of our paper. As the Indian Money Market is at last recovering its tone, it is not impossible that the necessity of raising an additional loan in this country may be temporarily postponed. At the same time there is little doubt that the wisest course is to apply a prompt and efficient remedy to the disordered state of the Indian finances, and this can only be done by the British Parliament.

The Compensation Committee, reasonably impatient at the supineness of the local Government, have forwarded two petitions for presentation to either branch of the Legislature. Lord Ellenborough has been requested to bring one before the notice of the Upper House, while that for the Commons has been entrusted to Mr. Roebuck. The total amount of claims, European and native, will not exceed one million and a half, a large portion of which might justly be recovered by laying fines on the towns and districts where the outrages were committed.

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce have elicited favourable answers from the Government on three points of local importance. In the first place, well-known firms are to have "the privilege of removing sample packets from the P. and O. Steam Company's vessels direct, under common passes from the Custom-house." Secondly, instructions are "to be issued to every pilot to hoist the ship's number on approaching each telegraph station, and to keep it flying till duly acknowledged." And thirdly, that part of the river immediately abreast of the P. and O. Company's wharf is to be kept sufficiently clear to permit the mail steamers at once to come to their moorings after their arrival off Garden Reach.

The appointment of Sir Charles Trevelyan as Governor of Madras has given intense satisfaction to all classes of the community. Lord Harris was expected to leave in the latter part of April, or in the beginning of May. Sir Patrick Grant had returned to the Presidency from his lengthened tour of inspection, and Sir Henry Davison, the new Chief Justice, was expected by the next steamer.

From China the news is quite satisfactory. Lord Elgin arrived at Hong Kong on the 2nd February, and departed on the following day for Canton. His lordship proposed to make an excursion up the Great West River, accompanied by a small squadron of gunboats.

Several expeditions into the interior have started from Canton, with very beneficial results. In the city itself tranquillity prevails, and beyond the walls the villagers are described as civil and well disposed.

GOVERNMENT MESSAGES.

To James Cosmo Melville, Esq., India-office, London, from R. Simson, Esq., Under-Secretary to the Government of India, dated Calcutta, Feb. 22, 1859.

OUDE.

Tranquillity continues to prevail throughout Oude, and the disarming of the province progresses rapidly. Up to the 12th inst. 378 cannons and 975,000 arms of all kinds have been collected, while 756 forts have been entirely levelled. The Begum and the Nana are still in the Nepal Terai. On the 9th instant Brigadier Horsford took fourteen guns from the rebels on the Nepal frontier; he was but slightly opposed, and suffered no loss. Mr. C. J. Wingfield assumed charge of the office of Chief Commissioner from Mr. Montgomery on the 15th inst.

CENTRAL INDIA AND RAJPOOTANA.

The rebels in Central India, under Tantia Topsee, are now reported to be making for Per tabgurh. They were at Antoolah on the 17th, and burnt Gassoonda, south-west of Jeerun, on the 19th inst. A telegram from Indore, dated the 18th inst., brings information that four generals, several other officers, and 600 men of the rebel force have given themselves up to the Rajah of Bikaner.

BUNDELCUND.

The troops of the Punniash Rajah attacked and defeated a body of rebels at Alove on the 10th inst.

All is quiet in the North-Western Provinces and in Bengal.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.—A return to the House of Lords shows that the total number of recruits for India in England, on the 9th inst., amounted to 743—viz., 86 cavalry, 231 infantry, 143 for engineers, and 283 artillery. The total number recruited for the Queen's and the Company's forces in the last six years, amounted to 10,229, of whom 6,631 were raised last year, and 3,917 in 1857.

THE RAILWAY.—The Friend of India did not believe it possible that a traveller from "New Zealand" or elsewhere, who wished to travel by train, was obliged to go through the following wandering course at Allahabad; viz.—First to the commissioner or brigadier, as the case might be, to obtain a "certificate" to enable him to travel by train personally; second, to the post-master, three miles and a half from the commissioner, to obtain a ticket for leave for his native servants to travel; and, lastly, three miles more to the railway station, to the traffic manager, to obtain the "tickets" for the particular class. Let not the Friend doubt it, the order was rigidly enforced, to the great annoyance of the brigadier and commissioner, who were thus made railway ticket clerks of by Government. There is not a tittle of untruth or exaggeration in this. The Government has issued another order which had almost shut up the railway altogether, for a time. It commanded the railway authorities not to pay the wages of engine drivers and other English workmen until leave to do so was obtained from the responsible officer of Government each month. In obedience to this order the locomotive superintendent refused in February to pay the men their wages for January, until an account of the same was first submitted for audit to Government and leave to pay received. This process seemed so opposed to the speed of locomotion, that the men refused to work the engines and brought the locomotive superintendent into a scrape by compelling him to pay without authority the wages of his men, for this he had to do or shut up shop. What will Government do next?—New Times.

PUNJAB RAILWAY.—The first sod of the Punjab Railway was turned by his honour the Lieutenant Governor on the morning of the 8th February. After which a brilliant dejeuner was given by the railway staff to a large party of ladies and gentlemen.

BENGAL.

INDIAN FINANCES.

The first and paramount subject connected with India is the great deficit. Whatever else is uncertain or doubtful in regard to the future of our strangely-won and anomalous Eastern empire, of this there cannot be a shadow of doubt, that unless both ends are made to meet in the finance of India, she will become an unendurable burden and opprobrium. Now there is really no difficulty in this if the subject be taken up with that large forethought and comprehensive wisdom which are never so necessary as in financial questions. In presence of an enormous deficit people are apt to become reckless or frightened. However, the British Parliament and public have pledged themselves to give their earnest study to Indian affairs by the destruction of the Company's government. Perhaps the full redemption of that pledge may, notwithstanding present appearances, turn out pleasant and profitable.

In the first place, this inquiry should be manfully faced. What are the real responsibilities of England in regard to the finance of India? If it be really true, as we confess it cannot but seem to us, that the credit of England and of India are now one and the same, if England's honour is really bound up in the balance-sheet of the latter, the sooner the fact is admitted and made the ground of action the better. Because it is by anticipating the recognition of that truth, inevitable sooner or later, that the true financial restoration of India lies, with results, it may be, of the highest benefit to this country. Some facts, which the observer of financial events may have been noting with singular interest and surprise, happen opportunely to give point and force to our remarks on this important subject. It is pretty nearly established as a certainty that neither by customs, nor excise, nor direct taxes, can India bear, either politically or economically, to be brought to a paying standard. But there is one practically inexhaustible field of exertion, that of public works, in which bold outlay may realise so large a margin of profit as to make of the existing deficit, great as it is, a small matter. Irrigation is authentically stated to pay in India in no existing case less than about 50, and in some actually 120 per cent. And the field for employment of capital in this single direction is enormous. Now, there has been lately issued to the London market the prospectus of a company formed for carrying out a plan of irrigation in Madras, which company proposes to raise a capital of £1,000,000 sterling, and has the guarantee of the Secretary of State for India for £5 per cent. We desire to know whether that guarantee is equivalent in form, as well as it certainly must be in substance, to the guarantee of the General Home Government upon the revenues of the empire. That it certainly must be so in substance may be perceived at once by those who have the slightest knowledge of what public credit intrinsically is. Any obligation of this nature contracted by the Secretary of State for India will certainly, if need come, be discharged by the people of England. But if this guarantee intrinsically is, and should be declared to be, an equivalent security to that of the Three per cents., it seems to indicate something very conventional and absurd in the workings of capital that there should be doubt, or difficulty, or delay in the application of a principle which is at once the only solvent of the India financial difficulty, and so profitable to the English capitalist. For it is ridiculous that any of the large Governments of Europe or the world should be able to command enormous sums in the English market, for which there is no security but the faith and existence of such Governments, and no larger return possible than a bare 5 or 6 per cent.; while undertakings as good in their security, with an immense margin of profit, and of the highest imperial importance, come in mere dribblets upon the London market.

We can scarcely conceive a plainer case than this when fairly examined. Let it never be forgotten that this Indian deficit must sooner or later be regarded as an English deficit; that the most experienced authorities declare that there is no means of putting an end to it except by these highly profitable methods. The true practical conclusion from these premisses appears to be unanswerably, that by a bold application of the principle of guarantee the Government of India should, as rapidly as possible, attract capital for these so lucrative public works for the mutual benefit of Government and capitalists, and in sufficient quantities to give buoyancy to the sinking revenue. Surely when patriotism and profit combine to urge English capital into such sources as these, it must, ere long, grow to be out of date to pour our millions into the lap of foreign despotisms, which are most likely to use them for our detriment.

We are not unaware, however, of the fact that the money-market is influenced by traditions, sympathies, conventionalities, just as other theatres of mere human activity. For the sense of profit, just as the sense of morality, becomes obscured and lulled in passing through the medium of human judgment and conscience. Men do not know, but have to learn their interests, as England with her free-trade history ought to understand by this time. It is a familiar thought to the Stock Exchange to lend millions to a foreign state, but India is as yet for many reasons a strange and weird land to English financiers. Besides, a certain amount of cliquerie and of personal prestiges and prejudices have grown up in the circle of European finance, the net result of which has been to make it more or less the ally of diplomacy in the maintenance of the statu quo. So there is a certain body of opposition that will present itself to the ideas which we are at present putting forth. But this must rapidly be dissipated. In matters of self-interest resistance has its limits, and they are soon reached. A field of investment so lucrative as India must recommend itself to the attention of thoughtful capitalists. And if the Government only have courage to apply sufficiently the exceptional principle of guarantee to a case altogether exceptional, on the ground of the interest which the Government has in the case, and as avowed partner in the profits of the enterprise, we do not doubt that the finance of India may be placed upon a footing of permanent soundness.—Madras Spectator.

CITY OF JEYPORE.

Thornton, in his Gazetteer of India, gives us an interesting account of this city, which is the principal place of the territory of Amber. It is situate in a small plain, or rather basin, conjectured to be the bed of a dried-up lake, having on all sides, except the south, barren stony hills, crowned in many places with forts. On the north the hill rises above the town several hundred feet, and on this is built the citadel, which "has a very bold appearance when viewed from the town, the south face of the rocks being very precipitous, and totally inaccessible."

We learn from other authorities that the town of Jeypore is about two miles in length from east to west, and in breadth about one mile. The main street is forty yards broad; and so are the cross-streets, which intersect it at right angles, while at each intersection is a chook or market-place. The cross-streets are in their turn intersected by narrower streets and lanes which are aligned with equal accuracy, so that nearly the whole city is portioned out into rectangular blocks. The houses from end to end on either side have the most exact and pleasing uniformity. At the corners are the Rajpoot temples, and at intervals in the streets occur ornamental cupola buildings opposing each other, giving a gay and tasteful variety to the scene. The chook consists of a series of shops or warehouses of one story, and above them rises a sort of balustrade or screen of fretwork masonry, and this again is crowned by a high turret. The whole is white, and the general effect singularly beautiful. From the palace, which forms almost an entire quarter of the city, rises a lofty minar of a very elegant form overlooking the chook, into which run other streets regularly meeting each other. The temples are of stone, on which the most elaborately curious workmanship is thrown away on figures without taste or proportion. Yet, taking these buildings altogether, and viewing them from a little distance, their forms, though somewhat grotesque, are by no means destitute of beauty. They would be well adapted to give an Oriental feature to a European park. The ringing of bells in the evening, the cries of the wandering traders, and the hum of the busy multitude collected in the chook, with the display of all sorts of merchandise, constitute an ensemble very unusual and pleasing. The outer gates only of the palace present themselves to the streets, and the building cannot be seen. The palace is said to possess within itself spacious tanks and groves not to be met with elsewhere in India, and to have many buildings of fine white marble. Thornton informs us again that there is an astronomical observatory in the palace with huge instruments, but that the pundits of the place are too small to make use of either. The Rajah Jey Sing, who founded the city early in the eighteenth century, was a great encourager of European sciences, and it is the tradition at Jeypore that the plan of the city was laid out by an Italian, who was sent to Europe amply supplied with the means of obtaining every sort of information, and who, after several years, returned and built Jeypore. At least so says an old number of the Asiatic Society's Journal. It is certain that the arrangement of the buildings and streets of Jeypore is superior to the architectural genius of a Rajpoot, or any other native of India. In 1779, Jeypore became the refuge and sanctuary of Hindoo learning, and it was here that Colonel Polier procured the first complete copy of the Vedas, which he afterwards presented to the British Museum. Don Pedro de Silva was at that time physician to the rajah, and many other Europeans were entertained at court for the cultivation of scientific pursuits. With such a disposition, there can be little doubt that the rajah availed himself of European taste and skill for the purpose of improving and embellishing his city. The liberality and magnificence of his patronage seem to have diffused over the period in which he reigned the charm which gave importance to the age of Augustus. The first treaty of alliance of this State with Great Britain is dated 18th December, 1803, and was offensive and defensive. Since that time there have been some internal and external disturbances. In July, 1838, Major Ross was deputed on a mission to Jeypore. Some months afterwards he was appointed Political Agent at that capital. The year following, a Council of Regency was formed for the administration of affairs, consisting of five of the principal Thakoors, with the Political Agent, and a President, and this is the present form of Government.—Bombay Times.

THE BENGAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The following letter has been forwarded by the present mail to the Secretary of State for India:—
Bengal Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta,
19th February, 1859.

C. H. Lushington, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Financial Department.

Sir,—I am requested to address you on behalf of the members of the Chamber of Commerce and others, assembled at a public meeting this day held to consider what course should be pursued in reference to the recent financial operations of the Government.

The meeting desires respectfully but firmly to express its strong feeling of the injury inflicted on all classes by the action of the Government in bringing out new loans at higher rates of interest than on existing open loans, such loans being opened without any previous notice, and without any information to the public as to what the financial wants of the Government, present and future, are or are likely to be; the meeting desires to renew and urge again in the strongest manner the recommendation to Government, by the committee of the chamber, in 1855, that the greatest possible publicity should be given to the financial proceedings and position, present and future, of the Government, a course which has ever been attended with the happiest effects in England, while the contrary course adopted in this country has produced, is now producing, and must hereafter produce, if continued, results injurious at once to the Government and to the public at large.

As every financial operation of the Government must necessarily affect all classes of the community, and especially the commercial class, the meeting has felt it to be quite within its province, and deems it to be its duty, to lay before the Government its views as to the present position of the money market in connection with the loan lately opened, and as to the best mode of raising future loans; these views they present with an earnest hope that they may be found at once serviceable to the Government and beneficial to the public.

The meeting entertains, and desires to express, its decided opinion that, as a general rule, and so far as may be found practicable, future loans for the service of India should be raised in England; in no other way can loans be raised with so much facility, or on such favourable terms; and it is believed that the circumstance of English capitalists investing freely in Indian loans, at moderate rates of interest, will afford the strongest inducement that can be found for wealthy natives of India to continue and extend their interest in existing loans, and to subscribe to any future loans which it may be found necessary to raise in India; it is universally known that England is the great centre of the commercial and monetary transactions of the world, and that the English money market is the general resort of nations and communities wishing to raise loans; already the principle of raising loans for India in England has been recognised and acted on by the 4 per Cent. Debenture loan of eight millions in 1854, a loan raised with the greatest facility, and which is maintained nearly at par, while in India is witnessed at this moment the extraordinary spectacle of a 4 per cent. loan at 26, and a 5 per cent. loan at 12 discount.

The meeting, however, is well aware that there may be circumstances at the present time which, in the opinion of Government, render undesirable a recourse to the English money market; should this unfortunately be so, it respectfully suggests to the Government that the most effectual means of raising money in India, at present, would be—

By a modification of the recent Notification for the issue of Treasury bills.

By a declaration of the amount required to be borrowed in the course of one, or if possible, two years.

By the statement that, so soon as such amount shall be received, the loan will be immediately closed.

By the assurance that no other loan will be raised within a period named; and

By declaring that no higher rate of interest will be paid in India than 5 per cent. per annum: but that failing the loan being taken up within a given time it will be raised in England.

The limit of time for conversion of the 4 per cent. and other loans into 5 per cents. to be the 30th April next, the date already fixed by the Government.

The meeting is strongly of opinion that until confidence is restored by such declarations as the foregoing, the offer on the part of Government of any enhanced rate of interest will not produce subscriptions, and will only place the monetary affairs of India in still greater confusion.

The meeting is of opinion that it would be desirable to maintain the principle adopted in the recent loans of an issue of Treasury bills bearing interest, thus constituting a floating as well as a funded debt—a system found in England to work beneficially at once to the Government and the public: to be successful, however, the meeting believes the present plan must be modified by making the bills receivable in payment of dues to Government at three months from the date of their issue, instead of twelve months, as at present proposed, and considers that, with such modification, the Treasury bills would become current at a lower rate of interest than that named, and that two pie per diem instead of three would be sufficient, while the lower rate would prevent the Treasury bills depreciating the value of the funded debt.

Should it be found necessary, in future, to supply any part of the wants of Government by loans in India, the meeting would urge the adoption of the English system of raising such loans by public tenders for the whole, or any part, of the amount before declared to be required, a reserve price being fixed by the Government, and ample time given for capitalists in England, as well as in India, to tender.

But whilst expressing its opinion as to the best mode of raising loans in India, should such course be sometimes imperative, the meeting would again urge that, so far as practicable, loans for the service of India should be raised in England; and that, now that the British possessions in India are placed under the direct Government of the Queen, the advantages of the English money market should be available to India, as they already are to every nation and every public community of the world.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
D. MACKINLAY, President.

MISCELLANEOUS

IMPORT DUTIES.—The Indian Government intends to raise the duties upon imports. It is estimated that an additional revenue to the amount of a million sterling may thus be raised without any serious injury to trade. The imports of the three Presidencies amount, excluding Singapore, which cannot be taxed without destroying trade, to about fifteen millions. An additional million would therefore require an additional seven per cent. ad valorem. That is a large amount, but revenue must be obtained somehow. Such an increase must be carefully managed, and requires, we fear, more intellect than the present Government possesses.

THE 33RD N.I.—Major Lake, on restoring their arms to the 33rd N.I., made the men a speech. The following is the most important portion of the address:—"On the part of Brigadier Milman, I congratulate you and your colonel that the day has come in which the Government has recognised your fidelity and devotion. When General Nicholson took away your arms he promised you that they should be restored if you behaved well. Knowing all that has happened since that day, I can testify that in every respect you have proved true to your salt. I, therefore, rejoice that the day has come in which General Nicholson's promise has been fulfilled. You should remember at all times how much you have to thank the Government for. What other Government pays its soldiers month by month, pensions them when they are worn out, and takes care of them when they are sick, as the British Government does for you? Why not tell the Sepoys in the old fashion that they are the buttresses of the empire?"

ALLAHABAD.—Letters from Allahabad say that nearly all the offices have been removed there from Agra, except the Accountant's office, which is to remain at Agra till September next. The Lieutenant Governor intends shortly to leave Allahabad on a tour of inspection.

THE "INDIAN PUNCH" ON THE MUTINY.—In the multitude of counsellors there is safety; or, who shall decide when doctors disagree? Agreeably to the hint conveyed in the first of these proverbs Mr. Punch has taken the opinion of everybody in general as to the cause of the Indian rebellion, and is now enabled to state that he is consequently in a position to solve the query contained in the second proverb, as will plainly appear in the end. The question put by Mr. Punch to his innumerable correspondents was simply—"Why did the rebels rebel?" He has now the pleasure of annexing a few out of the many thousands of answers received. The rebels rebelled according to correspondents as per number. 1. Because we did not sufficiently respect the peculiar notions of the natives. 2. Because we yielded too much deference to the prejudices of the natives. 3. Because we tried to convert the natives. 4. Because we didn't try to convert the natives. 5. Because we recognised the privileges of caste. 6. Because we interfered with ditto. 7. Because we treated the natives with harshness. 8. Because we treated them so kindly that they thought we were afraid of them. 9. Because the officers of the Bengal army had too high an opinion of their men. 10. Because the said officers looked down upon and slighted their men. 11. Because the native officers had too much influence. 12. Because the native officers were imbecile and inefficient. 13. Because there were too few Europeans in the country. 14. Because Europeans had become too common in the country. "When wonder waneth, worship waxeth cold." 15. Because the Europeans meddled with the native women. 16. Because the Europeans had given up native women, and taken to matrimony. 17. Because we disowned the King of Oude. 18. Because we didn't disown the King of Delhi. 19. Because we excluded natives from all positions of influence. 20. Because we appointed natives deputy collectors. 21. Because of education. 22. Because education has been shamefully neglected. 23. Because we have done nothing for the improvement of the country. 24. Because we have shamefully offended native piety in constructing railroads and telegraphs, and damming up sacred rivers for irrigation. 25. Because we made our sepoy soldiers too good soldiers. 26. Because our military system was abominably lax and inefficient. 27. Because we introduced English laws. 28. Because we did not import English lawyers for magistrates. Mr. Punch on deliberate consideration of the above (and some thousands more) opinions, comes to the conclusion that taking the word cause in the sense of reason the Indian rebellion had literally no cause at all, but was altogether mad and preposterously unreasonable; and that it comes nearer to a case of demoniacal possession than any other occurrence since the importation of the legion at Gadara.

WHO'S WHO.—The New Times publishes the following official message from the political assistant for Bundelcund:—"The report, which has reached England, that Tantia Topsee and the Nana Sahib are the one and the same, is totally devoid of foundation. According to the best information available at the time of writing, the Nana Sahib is a Chitpawna, and Tantia Topsee a Karara or Goojratee Brahmin; the latter being by profession a Khoordia or money-changer, who held a shop for the sale of pice at Srinagar, eleven miles south-west from Mahoba, shortly before the disturbances. Further information will be furnished hereafter." Tantia Topsee, then, after all, is a Bunneah.

MR. R. P. HARRISON.—When Mr. R. P. Harrison, judge of Hooghley, was appointed officiating accountant to the Government of Bengal, we observed that it was a pity to remove an officer who had shown some judicial ability to a post requiring only an acquaintance with official routine, for no Civil servant is an accountant. An opportunity now offers for placing the right man in the right place. Mr. R. P. Harrison might be appointed to the Sudder, and it would be advisable, in the present financial pressure, to effect a saving by reducing the salary of the Bengal accountant to 1,000 rupees.—Englishman.

RAWUL PINDEE.—The Lahore Chronicle learns that the Government have sanctioned the expenditure of a lac of rupees for the construction of new barracks at Rawul Pindée.

THE "EDUCATIONAL GAZETTE."—Government have sanctioned for another year a grant of Co.'s Rs. 2,400, for the publication of the Educational Gazette, a Bengalee weekly journal. This was formerly given on condition that any advertisements sent by Government should be gratuitously inserted. This is now modified, and the editor has been authorised to charge at the usual rate for any advertisements which may in future be sent by officers under the Government of Bengal.

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—Sir W. B. O'Shaughnessy notifies that in future the charge for messages will be regulated by geographical distance, and not by the length of wire traversed. This arrangement will diminish the cost of messages sent between Calcutta and Bombay twenty-five per cent.

BATTA TO A POLICE CORPS.—The Government has sanctioned the claims to batta of the three companies of Gurruckpore Sikh police corps, who have been doing the duty of regular troops till quite recently, and have been many times engaged with the enemy along with detachments of Brigadier Rowcroft's force.

LIBRARY INSTITUTE FOR CALCUTTA.—The Phanix mentions a project for building a library institute in Calcutta. It is to contain reading rooms, lecture rooms, and a large hall for concerts. The building fund is to be raised by subscriptions. The building is scarcely required. A senate house for the University is sure to be built one day, and when finished, will answer every purpose. Had a little more attention been paid to aural necessities in building the Metcalfe Hall, that edifice might have served the turn.

SIR JOHN LAWRENCE leaves Lahore on the 1st of March. He proceeds home by Bombay, having failed to obtain a passage by Calcutta, an accident not without its advantage. In Calcutta he would have unquestionably received an ovation, which as unquestionably would have been a political mistake. It would have taxed the art of our few decent speakers to do adequate justice to Sir John Lawrence without drawing the contrast between his achievements and those of the Government of India, and any comparison of the kind would have been injurious to interests more valuable than any reputation. Nothing perhaps could be more injurious to the future good Government of India than the practice of setting up a champion from within the administration to oppose the Governor General. The authority of the office is invaluable to the State, and must be maintained, independent of all party feeling, and all reference to the personal qualities or defects of its possessor. That truth will be felt in England even more than in India, and an ovation in Calcutta would simply have impaired the political prospects of its hero. The embarrassment is as well avoided.—Friend of India.

CAPTAIN T. RATTRAY has been appointed inspector of police battalions in the Lower Provinces on a consolidated salary of Rs. 1,200 per month, with travelling allowance of 8 annas per mile for distance actually travelled, and Rs. 5 a day when absent from head quarters. Orders have been issued by Government that in future when military officers are withdrawn from the police battalions, &c., it be notified that their services are placed at the disposal of the military department, instead of at the disposal of H. E. the Commander in Chief.

GORUCKPORE.—Lord Canning has determined that the inhabitants of Goruckpore are not to be disarmed, on the ground of its being one of the old districts.

MILITARY STATIONS.—The home authorities have inquired at what places the local Government intended to station British troops. A list was sent home, and after consulting with the Commander in Chief, the following places were selected in the North Western provinces—Delhi, Allahabad, Agra, Cawnpore, Fyzabad (Oude), Banda, Etawah, Bolundshuhur, Meerut, Muttra, and Jhansi: other stations are not determined on.

MUTLAH, Feb. 21.—After a pleasant passage I reached the Hedza-Hana or Mutlah river in less than twenty-four hours. The town of Canning is situated on the left-hand bank of the river, and Ellengunge, a grant belonging to a Mr. Burkin-young, on the opposite side. At the latter place there is a police thannah in charge of a Mr. A. J. Simon. Mr. Leonard, the former deputy magistrate, has taken charge. He holds his "cutcherry" at Barripore. Beside the thannah there are several godowns, tanks, a mill, &c., in this grant, with numerous clusters of huts belonging to the ryots who have settled on the grant in question since the year 1852. Out of 45,000 biggahs, the extent of this grant, 13,275 biggahs have been cleared up to the year 1857—the whole of which was cultivated during the past season. Mr. Donahoy, the agent, deserves great credit for having got so much of this grant cleared in less than eight years. The town of Canning is a jungle compared with Ellengunge, and it will be for a long time to come, unless effective means are adopted to keep the jungle from growing again on the spots that have been cleared. With the exception of thatched golahs for the storage of salt, and a few huts in which the coolies live, nothing else has been erected in the place. Two tanks have been excavated, and a reservoir to hold rain-water constructed. The latter would have proved a blessing to the indigent poor residing around the place, and also to the coolies employed in cutting down the jungle, had the parties who superintended the work laid a proper foundation, and thus have shut out the springs. The water at present used by the natives is brackish, which is, without a doubt, the cause of so much sickness. I was told that on the occasion of Messrs. Grant and Beadon paying the place a visit a fortnight or so ago, the coolies employed in the lot represented to those gentlemen that they had not been paid their wages for four months.—The Nazir or some such person, no doubt, is the party to blame; but why do not Captain McKenzie, formerly of the schooner Joseph Manook, and Mr. French, the civil engineer, employed in surveying and marking off lots in Canning Town, see to the payment of these men's wages at the regular time? During the past month Captain Hill, 2nd assistant master attendant, paid the place a visit in the Swiftsure, for the purpose of marking off the shoals in the river with buoys. Mr. Warman, licensed pilot, is the party who has the looking after the work. Captain Reddie, the master attendant, also visited the place in the Despatch steamer. Tigers are numerous in the jungle on both sides of the river, and alligators of all sizes are as plentiful as blackberries. Much of the Beektee fish sold in the Dhurruntollah market is caught in this river; the boats employed to take the fish to town get up in six hours to Ballyagatta. One of the ameers of Scinde has a sporting seat a short distance from this place. He has been known to kill "two large tigers and several deer" within a week. He will not try his hand on wild soors. There are several haunts—market-places held round about this place during certain days of the week, where fowls, ducks, eggs, venison and native vegetables are procurable. The place, however, is very sickly during the rains, and persons attacked with fever are, I am informed, a long time in shaking it off. The water in the river being salt, and very clear on the flood, parties wishing to indulge in a salt-water bath would find it less expensive to get a supply from this river, instead of from the Sandheads. Mr. Donahoy I find has planted cotton at Ellengunge. The natives are of opinion that it will succeed by-and-by; it does appear strange why a postal communication does not exist between this place and Calcutta. The magistrate of the 24-Purgunnahs forwards documents through the zemindars; then why cannot the Director General for Post Offices devise a similar plan?—Hurkaru.

MR. E. H. LUSHINGTON, junior secretary to the Board of Revenue, will be appointed to officiate as Controller of Government Salt Chowkies, vice Mr. Campbell, who intends shortly to proceed on furlough to Europe.

AN INDIAN PENNY-A-LINER.—A private letter from Benares, dated 13th February, states that that station was visited the preceding evening by one of the most terrific storms ever remembered even by that undoubted authority "the oldest inhabitant." For three hours, hail, rain, thunder, and lightning reigned supreme, and as all the buildings are tiled, the state of the interiors of bungalows may be imagined. The hailstones are said to have averaged the size of hen's eggs, and several weighed three and a-half to four. Great damage was done throughout the station to furniture, books, bedding, &c. The roads were strewn with leaves from the trees, and dead birds, even vultures falling victims to the force with which the hailstones fell.—Hurkaru.

VERY CONSIDERATE.—Certain large sums on account of compensation to the mortgagees of Koorar Sing's estate having been drawn for by Mr. Halliday, the civil auditor refused to pass them without a reference to the Government of India, on the ground that he is not authorised to pass larger sums than Co.'s Rs. 25,000. The Lieutenant Governor and the civil auditor both referred the matter to Government, and the Governor General decided, that as the payment of these sums will cause a saving to Government, as the estates have been confiscated, the civil auditor is authorised to pass them, but in future he is not to pass such bills without the sanction of the Supreme Government.

MR. C. N. COOKE.—Amongst the candidates for the secretaryship of the Bank of Bengal, in the event of Mr. Plumb's resignation, is Mr. C. N. Cooke, the present accountant. Mr. Cooke has been for nearly twenty years in the bank, during which period, at his suggestion, several important changes, which facilitate the operations of the establishment, have been introduced.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH.—The Archdeacon of Calcutta has suggested a new site for St. James' Church, situated on the west of the Circular road, between the Dhurrumtollah and Jaun Bazar streets. The access to St. James' Church through bye-lanes was a source of constant complaint, and a recommendation for widening the principal of them was made by the seetholders. The new church of St. James' will be constructed on the same principle as the late building, but capable of accommodating a larger congregation. This is judicious since it will be the only Protestant Church in the neighbourhood.

THE ROYAL PROCLAMATION AGAIN.—We extract the following from the letter of a missionary, writing to the Mofussilite concerning the riots at Tinnevely, and the misrepresentations of her Majesty's Proclamation. He says:—

"A zemindar from a large village between this place and Cossipore called on me the other day, and expressed a desire to be supplied with some books which should give him an insight into the Christian religion. After some little conversation, I gave him what I thought would enlighten him on the subject. On his expressing a fear that he might offend the Brahmins, and subject himself to a legal process if the matter were known, I became anxious to ascertain what was the ground of his fears. In answer to my inquiries, he referred me to the Queen's Proclamation, in which he had been given to understand that her Majesty had issued her royal commands for all Hindoos to reverence and worship (namaskar karen) the Brahmins, for all classes of persons to cleave to the religion of their fathers, and for all attempts at proselytism to cease. This is, moreover, far from being a solitary case."

RAMPORE.—The Delhi Gazette mentions that the Mahomedans of Rohilkund have been sending their arms into Rampore. The Hindoos who have no connections in that state are bitterly indignant, and declare that we disarm our friends and leave our foes with weapons. The Government has accordingly requested the Nuwab of Rampore to imitate the general policy, and disarm his subjects. The request has been complied with.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MADRAS FUSILIERS.—The Fusiliers reached Madras on the 21st February, and were landed the following day under a royal salute. The day was observed as a general holiday in all Government offices, and by the community at large. The troops of the garrison were called out and formed a street from Messrs. Parry's office at the south end of the beach up to the railway terminus. Along this street the gallant veterans marched, amidst the enthusiastic cheers of the ladies and gentlemen who crowded the verandahs of the offices on the beach, and of an immense multitude of natives. As they passed by, the troops presented arms to the colours that had come victorious from so many fields of battle. Arrived at the railway station, an address from the European community of Madras was read by Colonel Hamilton, the Deputy Military Secretary to Government, and another from the native community, by Dr. Jesudasan. It is only necessary to state that each address dwelt in eloquent terms on the distinguished services rendered by the gallant regiment, and that each concluded by intimating it was intended to present a more substantial token of esteem and admiration. After the reading of these addresses, the fusiliers, and a few gentlemen who had been invited by Government to be present, sat down to a dinner which had been prepared at the expense of the authorities. Dinner over, the men stepped into a special train, which conveyed them to Arcot, and from thence they were carried by transit to Bangalore, where their wives and families had previously been sent. We must not omit to mention that all the ships in the roads were gaily decorated with flags, that some of them fired salutes in honour of the fusiliers, and that the various offices on the beach were likewise decorated with flags. Altogether the reception was a very brilliant one, and has given great gratification to the regiment. It was not, however, all that could have been desired. For example, the general body of the public wished and were quite prepared to give a dinner at their own expense to the fusiliers. Instead of this there was an entertainment at the expense of the Government, to which a very few gentlemen were invited, the majority of the merchants, most of the professional men, all the members of the press and all other classes being excluded. We stated above that the European and native communities had determined to present to the regiment a lasting testimonial of their appreciation of the services rendered by the fusiliers. The form which the native testimonial is to take has not yet, we believe, been settled. That of the Europeans is to be as follows. A piece of plate is to be presented to the officers' mess, on which will be engraved the names of the battles in which the regiment has fought, and which will be surmounted by a small equestrian statuette of its late lamented colonel, the heroic Neill. A piece of plate will likewise be presented to the sergeants' mess. The third resolution carried at the public meeting has been objected to on military grounds, has been abandoned, and suggestions have been invited for some other testimonial which shall be common to the whole regiment. The proposal was, that the Queen should be memorialised to grant a third standard to the regiment, to be carried by an additional colour sergeant (elected by the sergeants), whose staff pay of twelve pounds per annum was to have been paid out of the interest of money to be invested in Government securities. Should any funds remain after these objects have been accomplished they will be devoted to providing clothing, &c., for the families of the men. With reference to the Neill memorial it may be mentioned that arrangements have been made with Mr. Noble, the London sculptor, to have a bronze equestrian statue, which will be erected in some public part of Madras. Funds for this purpose have already been collected, and subscriptions for the fusiliers testimonial have flowed in rapidly.—Madras Athenaeum.

ANDROPOGON NIGER.—The Madras Spectator mentions that a new plant, the Andropogon Niger, has recently been introduced into Madras from Pondicherry. It is a kind of sugar-cane, but grows very rapidly to a height of twenty feet. Besides the saccharine matter, the plant yields a permanent brown dye. This dye is obtained from the coating of the seeds, thousands of which are found in the large head of the plant. The Chinese call it the Channa cane.

THE BOAT NUISANCE still continues, and such has been the demand for boats and catamarans lately that the vessels in the roads have been obliged to have recourse to their own boats and other contrivances in pulling to the back of the surf for bazaar supplies as well as for transhipping cargo. One of the vessels finding its boats not answering in the latter service, tried the expedient of constructing a catamaran to convey some iron to an adjoining ship, but the raft was unable to bear the weight of the cargo transferred to it, and one seaman was seriously hurt in the operation. Every day proves the urgent necessity that exists for doing something speedily to relieve the shipping of the great loss and delay occasioned by want of proper and efficient means of transport.

EMIGRATION.—In the year 1858 the number of coolie labourers who embarked for the Mauritius was 10,869. The number who returned during the same period was 1,449½ labourers and 36 children. The number of coolies who emigrated to the West Indies in the same year was 1,594½.

PLAN OF MADRAS.—On the 16th January the chief engineer reported the completion of an edition of 200 copies "of the large plan of Madras and its suburbs."

VIZAGAPATAM, Feb. 11.—His Excellency the Commander in Chief, Col. A. Cotton, the Inspector General of hospitals, and Capt. Clark and Grant, Actg. A.D.C. to his excellency, arrived in Dowlaishwaram from Masulipatam on the evening of the 4th. His excellency inspected the Sappers on the 5th, and started with his suite in the river steamer for the "Bison Hill" on the morning of the 7th. His visit to this hill was for the purpose of determining upon a sanitary post. On his return he proceeded to Samulcottah, and came thence to Vizagapatam. We are informed that Samulcottah has been recommended as a station for Europeans.

SIR P. GRANT.—A salute of 17 guns was fired from the Saluting Battery on Thursday evening, the 17th Feb., announcing the return to the Presidency of His Excellency Lieutenant General Sir Patrick Grant, K.C.B., Commander in Chief of the Madras army. A guard of honour, consisting of 100 rank and file, with full complement of officers from H. M.'s 44th regiment with regimental colour and band, paraded at the Light House Beach, to receive His Excellency on landing.

COCHIN, Feb. 12.—H. M. steam ship Australian, from Madras, anchored in our roads this morning, en route to Mangalore. She will leave at daylight to-morrow, after making some repairs to one of her boilers. The wreck of the unfortunate Kohinoor was sold by auction, on Monday last, for Rs. 235. We find the Kongany Bimbans still remain at Allepey, the authorities there considering it impossible to remove them from the Pagoda, where they are now deposited, without employing force; a proceeding which the instructions of the Madras Government do not authorise. We learn that the memorials presented by the ryots to Lord Harris, during his lordship's late visit to Cochin, complaining of the unjust and oppressive system introduced by the present Dewan on collecting revenue in kind, have been referred to General Cullen for explanation. We are satisfied the innovation complained of is bad in principle, and a breach of faith with the ryots, who have been guaranteed a commutation rate in money by successive administrations. If the exigencies of the State required it, the rate in question might be readjusted upon an equitable basis; but we trust no amount of mystification will induce the Government to sanction a return to the exploded doctrine of payment in kind.—Courier.

THE CHIEF OF JAMKUNDIE, who, it may be recollected, was arrested shortly after Mr. Manson, the political agent of the southern Mahratta country, was murdered, has been released. He was, it seems, confined as a precautionary measure, and now that danger is no longer apprehended has been set at liberty, in accordance with the terms of the amnesty. But his fort is to be levelled to the ground. The chief is, it is reported, about to get up nautches and balls on a grand scale to celebrate his return from captivity.

A JAIN SANSKRIT AND PRACRIT SCHOOL was opened at Ahmedabad on the 23rd January, for the purpose of propagating the Jain religion and customs. It is the first institution of the kind that has been established among the Jains in Goozerat in our time, and the Bombay Standard states that "it is jointly endowed by Rao Bahadur Muggunbhai Kurrumhund, and by Neknamdar Shukhawut Bahadur Hurkoorbaee, widow of the late Set Huthising Keshrising. The total endowment is Rs. 20,000—Rs. 6,000 of which the donors propose to lay out in erecting a suitable building in the locality, the rest to be invested in the Government Five per Cent. Loan. The interest will produce Rs. 700 annually. It is said there will be some scholarships founded. A great number of people were present on the occasion of opening the school."

ADVENTURE AT SEA.—A vernacular paper mentions, on the authority of a letter from Aden, that H.M.'s sloop of war Elphinstone, I.N., having proceeded to the Kooria Moorla Islands, the commander of the vessel despatched Lieutenant R. B. Leefe, in a boat, with seven sailors, to survey the opposite coast, but in consequence of the heavy swells of the sea, the boat was carried off, and was lost sight of. The party were obliged to live on biscuit and water for twelve days in an open sea, until at length they fell in with some Arab bungalows, which conveyed them safe to Aden. They came to Bombay by the last steamer.

BLACK MAIL.—A gentleman who has recently passed down the country, through a very wild district, by way of Peynt and Dhurrumpore, informs us that everything is as quiet in those parts as possible. The hanging of the Peynt Rajah, No. 2, in last year, appears to have worked wonders, and our old enemies, the Bheel Rajahs in the Dhangs, who gave Captain (now General Sir James) Outram so much trouble in his early service some thirty years ago, apprehended and gave up to Government numerous persons who had fled from Peynt thither. Such is the power of money, and of fair treatment. We have rented the Dhangs for the sake of the timber since 1842, paying about Rs. 11,000 per annum for them; and never was money better expended. Two years before that period a European could not enter the Dhangs without a heavy escort, whereas now such an encumbrance would be simply a nuisance.—Poona Observer, Feb. 9.

THE BHOREGHAT RIOT.—Mr. R. Faviell, the Bombay contractor, has written a letter explaining the late outbreak on the railway. He says, he tried the system of sub-contracts in order to obtain a larger supply of labour, and succeeded in collecting 15,000 men. The demand for labour is, however, so great that the men were perpetually raising their prices, and asking new terms. The Europeans gave way in all cases rather than stop the works, and the majority of labourers are perfectly contented, and are still at work. The recent murder was committed by a gang of 500 wild Mhangs, who had been for some time most insubordinate.

ONE MAN'S MEAT, &c.—The Madras Spectator reports that the business of the Supreme Court is largely on the increase. There are a dozen causes for trial on the plea side, and eleven on the equity side. Moreover, all the affairs of the late nabob of the Carnatic have been thrown into the Supreme Court. Some four hundred demands are to be brought forward, and the aggregate of claims will seriously affect the Treasury. So great will be the press of work that the judges do not intend to sit on the small cause side.

CHINA.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

HONG KONG, Feb. 15.—Lord Elgin arrived here from Shanghai, in his steam-yacht Furious, on the 2nd February; but departed next day for Canton. His Excellency was to start from that place last night or this morning to make an exploration, similar to that he has made of the Yang-tze, of the Great West River, which, according to the Chinese, can be ascended for a long distance in vessels of light draught. A number of troops will go on this expedition, and provisions will be taken for three weeks. Six or seven gun-boats are to go up, towing flat-bottomed junks, but it is doubtful whether any attempt will be made to advance beyond the point where gun-boats become unserviceable and the ascent might be continued in junks. Two missionaries once ascended the Canton river nearly to the borders of Kwang-si, but otherwise it is unknown to Europeans, except in the immediate neighbourhood of the city and from Chinese accounts. It is supposed that Lord Elgin intends to return to Shanghai; and that he will accompany his brother, the Hon. Mr. Bruce, to Peking, but nothing certain is known of his intentions. Until the British Embassy is established at Peking, it would be inexpedient either for his lordship, or any part of the force now here, to depart.

Some shorter expeditions than that now contemplated have continued to be made from Canton. Tai-leuk, Tai-fan, and other of the more important of the famous ninety-six villages, have been visited, and proclamations have been distributed in them, calling on the natives to lay aside all animosity against foreigners, and on the elders and gentry to see to the proper treatment of foreign visitors and travellers. These proclamations were well received; and two gentlemen have already paid a private visit to Fat-shan, and to Sheektsing, where the braves were routed, without any other protection than that which travellers usually have.

Nothing has yet been published about the settlement of the site for the factories at Canton; but from the fact that the principal American house has begun to build on the old site, it is supposed that will be, or has been, selected by Lord Elgin, with an extension probably to the westward.

Rear Admiral Sir Michael Seymour leaves this, in the Calcutta, very soon, and will be succeeded by Sir Byan Martin. During the period of Admiral Seymour's command in these waters he has enjoyed a rare exemption from the just or unjust censure which has been so liberally bestowed on General Straubenzee, Sir John Bowring, to a less degree on Lord Elgin, and generally on those connected with the administration and execution of foreign affairs in China. Against Admiral Seymour no word has been uttered, and he leaves not only in command of universal respect, but with the affection of his own service.

In the colony, and at Canton, trade has hardly yet recovered from the lull consequent on the China New Year; especially there has been little demand for imports. The expeditions into the neighbourhood of Canton have had the effect of assuring the Chinese of the pacific intentions of the allies, and of showing the power of foreigners to advance into the interior.

The appointment of Mr. Green as acting Attorney-General has been confirmed by the home Government, but we have not yet heard whether the suspension of Mr. Anstey has been approved of. After a more than usually animated debate in the Legislative Council, the Bowring Praya ordinance was rejected by a majority of six to three. The steamer Five Brothers was wrecked in the Cupeli passage on the 28th Jan., the Admiralty chart and the China Pilot not giving sufficient information of the danger of the passage.

The export of tea for the season amounts to 38,121,100lbs. against 41,107,300lbs. last season, or a decrease of 2,986,800lbs. Of silk, the export amounts to 52,717 bales, against 48,426, or an increase of 4,289. To Marseilles the export of silk amounts to 5,998 bales. The total export of tea to the United States amounts to 24,533,300lbs.—Overland China Mail.

CEYLON.

COLOMBO, March 1.—For the greater portion of the past fortnight the weather has been all that could be desired—regular hot, dry, February weather—and, consequently, the operations of curing and shipping have been carried briskly on. Five vessels have sailed for London, with 29,000 cwt. of coffee, the bulk being plantation sorts. A cargo, largely composed of plantation, has gone to France, a cargo of native to New York, and a small quantity of this latter sort has been taken to Bombay. The aggregate exports of the fortnight amount to 43,087 cwt., in the proportion of 27,076 plantation and 15,411 native. The total exports from the 1st of October, 1858, to date are 266,100 cwt., of which 153,285 cwt. are plantation, and 112,815 cwt. native.

The event of the fortnight has been the annual gathering of the Planters' Association, for business and festivity, in Kandy.

While we are writing it is probable that the Pearl Fishery at Aripo has commenced. A body of troops destined for the scene left Colombo yesterday. The Governor intends to be present in person at the fishery. Two divers from England having come out to aid in submarine researches, we trust results of great and permanent value may be obtained.

While the Governor is dwelling with natural pride on the results of irrigation works in the Batticaloa district, we are rejoiced to learn that in the southern province large progress is being made with important works of the same nature. Mr. Gordon Forbes, the Government agent, appears to have most heartily seconded the efforts of Mr. Harrison and his assistants, and the result of the combined energy brought to bear on the Oorobokka Dam is a moral certainty that the work will be completed early in April. But improvement is not to stop short with the restoration of this comparatively modern work. The ancient Tissa Maha Rama tank will be made to spread fertility around it. Mr. Harrison, accompanied by two European assistants, Messrs. Blyth and Worsop, with Mr. Brohier, the district surveyor, are diligently at work, surveying and evelling for the irrigation works at Kirimie and Tissa Maha Rama. It is with material improvements and useful public works that Sir H. Ward's name will be most honourably associated. While the Gampolla bridge is the admiration of all who see it, the second bridge at Katugastotte promises to excel it in usefulness and beauty. The Governor's personal energy is certainly seconded by able instruments. Amongst the rest by Mr. Churchill, a gentleman still youthful, who has quietly but rapidly and substantially carried out so many great improvements that he has now been chosen by the Governor, with the approval of the public, to succeed Major Skinner in charge of the department of Public Works.

The Railway Works continue to progress, upwards of 3,000 persons being employed on them, while the expenditure ranges from £5,000 to £10,000 monthly. On the departure of Capt. Cumming by the Simla he attempted to depute his functions as agent, pending the arrival of Mr. Beeston, to the Storekeeper, Mr. Greig. Mr. Doyne, the chief engineer, applied successfully to the law courts to render this appointment nugatory. Matters remained in an unpleasant position for a few days. Mr. Beeston, the new agent, arrived by the Nemesis, however, and now we trust all will go smoothly and briskly forward.

Previously to the meeting of the Planters' Association, a meeting of Kandian chiefs and others took place at Kandy, to petition for the repeal of a very stringent law respecting title to Chena lands, the Jungle lands, which are only cultivated occasionally, the boundaries of which are undefined, and no regular title to which was granted in the time of the Kandian kings.—Overland Observer.

THE PEARL NECKLACE.—The Ceylon Times understands "that the Pearl Necklace subscription, so long in abeyance, has at length been appropriated, though not in the manner originally intended. Sir Charles MacCarthy will, we are told, be the bearer of 'Lankas' Gift' to the Princess Royal of England, now the Princess Frederick William of Prussia. It will consist of a richly worked silver box, mounted on an elegantly carved ebony pedestal, and surmounted by the gold elephant, already alluded to as the intended gift. Beside the elephant will be placed a pair of bracelets, set with the choicest pearls from the Aripoo fishery: and the whole will be encased in a richly carved ebony cabinet."

BURMAH.

RANGOON, Jan. 31st.—On the 21st instant some excitement was caused here by the appearance of a small screw steamer sailing up the river with the French flag flying; on inquiry it was found out that she was from Bordeaux, bringing a number of Frenchmen with their families, who are going to Ava to establish silk filatures for the purpose of manufacturing silk of a superior description. The notorious D'Orgoni, or General D'Orgoni, as he is pleased to style himself, is, I am informed, at the bottom of this commercial enterprise. If the object really be to advance the interests of commerce, no one will grumble; but perhaps the soi-disant general has something else in view. Whatever may be his failings, there is no doubt that he is not wanting in tact, and he has succeeded in this instance also in prevailing upon a silk manufacturing company in Lyons to send out the Alon Prakh (such is the name of the vessel) with a good staff of manufacturers to try the experiment in Upper Burmah. The vessel I believe is to be offered to the king for sale, and with the proceeds a start will be made. But nothing will be done until D'Orgoni arrives, he being expected here by the next steamer from Calcutta. How far the expectation of his friends will be realised it is difficult for me to say, but in the face of the Act which the Legislative Council of India in their wisdom passed some time ago, it is not likely that a troublesome individual like the General will be permitted to set his foot again on Burmese soil. The Alon Prakh is a vessel of about 130 tons. Our worthy Commissioner has not yet returned from the frontier. The old ex-King of Delhi continues a close prisoner. What is to be done with him no one here seems to know.—Englishman.

ROADS IN INDIA.—The number of roads opened for traffic in the several Presidencies of India since the year 1848 is as follows, viz.:—In Madras, number of first-class roads, 13; length in miles, 2,222; number of miles constructed since 1848, 684; cost of construction and repair since 1848, 36,26,673 rupees; second and third class roads—number of miles constructed since 1848, 3,709½; cost, 52,46,944 rupees; canals, 512 miles; cost, 25,71,960 rupees. In Bombay, first-class roads, 188 miles; cost of construction, 14,72,995 rupees; second and third class roads, 3,721 miles; cost, 23,02,709 rupees. In Scinde, 1,929½ miles of first class roads; cost, 1,51,569 rupees; and of second and third class roads, 1,835½ miles; cost, 1,97,425 rupees; canals, 223 miles; cost, 2,21,030 rupees. In Bengal, 64 miles of first-class roads; cost, 10,98,093 rupees; and 389 miles of second class roads; cost, 4,40,472 rupees; second and third class roads, 3,853 miles; cost, 12,33,776 rupees; canals, 12 miles; at a cost of 79,572 rupees. In the Punjab, 1,141 miles of first class roads; cost, 95,95,877 rupees; and second and third class roads, 9,285 miles; cost, 23,20,196 rupees.

THE MINTS.—During the month of December, 1858, the Calcutta mint coined Rs. 34,21,235; the Madras mint Rs. 5,33,254; and the Bombay mint Rs. 3,00,000.

NOTIFICATION.

Fort William, Financial Dep., Feb. 21, 1859.

His Excellency the Governor General of India in Council is pleased to notify for general information the financial measures which have been resolved upon, in order to provide means for carrying on the public service in the coming year 1859-60.

On the 16th of January, 1857, a five per cent. loan was opened, in supercession of the four-and-a-half per cent. loan, opened on the 30th of August, 1856, which had been found in the then state of the money market not to afford sufficient inducement to capitalists. On the 30th of April, 1857, the financial position of the Government of India was excellent. The annual deficit which had been experienced for several years, and which in 1853-54 had amounted to Rs. 211 lacs, chiefly in consequence of the great extension in late years of public works, was reduced for the year 1856-57 to the small sum of Rs. 18 lacs, and this financial restoration had been accomplished without the stoppage of those great works of material improvement of which India is so much in need. But as the Government had raised but a small amount in the way of loan, after the closing of the Five per Cent. Public Works' Loan in October, 1855, the cash balances in India had fallen so low that the opening of an effectively drawing loan had become indispensable.

In May, 1857, the revolt of the Bengal native army broke out, and it became necessary by adequate measures both in India and at home, to provide the means of making those extraordinary exertions by which, under the blessing of Providence, the Indian empire has been saved, and tranquillity has been restored.

The Government at home undertook all the charges which had to be met at home, both the ordinary home charges of each year, and the extraordinary home charges which the despatch to India of a large English force, and the provision of an immense supply of the munitions of war (a vast quantity of which had been lost or destroyed), rendered necessary; and it assisted the Indian exchequer, at the moment of greatest pressure, by the remittance of a million sterling in bullion. These objects were met by the issue at home of temporary debentures to the amount of eight millions sterling. The Government of India had the task of providing for the main part of the extraordinary war charges, which of course had to be disbursed in India; and for the barrack accommodation of many thousands of Europeans, as also for the restoration of the treasure which had been plundered; and this it had to do, when nearly all the revenues of one of the local governments had been swept away.

The five per cent. loan, which would have been adequate for ordinary wants and in ordinary times, was found to be inadequate at this time of extreme pressure. Accordingly it was necessary to induce capitalists to come to the assistance of the State, by an enhancement of the terms; and the Governor General in Council resolved to borrow at six per cent.

He was aware that this could not be done without in some degree affecting injuriously those holders of the paper of former loans, who had not purchased for purposes of permanent investment; but this is the condition of all such holders of Government stock in all countries, whenever a great exigency forces upon the State the necessity of raising a large sum in a limited time. The Governor General in Council, however, was desirous to save such holders from loss, as far as that could be done consistently with the paramount object in view. Therefore, instead of simply opening a six per cent. loan, which would have brought down the price of four and five per cent. paper to a low point, he threw open the existing five per cent. loan to subscriptions, half in cash and half in four per cent. paper. This arrangement for many months answered the purpose, the market price of the paper of former loans was but little affected by the operation, and the expectations of Government were fully met by large and regular subscriptions through the medium of the then existing holders of four per cent. stock, or those who purchased of them for the express purpose of subscribing to the loan. From the opening of this conversion loan to the present time upwards of eight crores have been paid in in cash.

Latterly, however, whether from the partial exhaustion of such holders of four per cent. paper as are able and willing to convert it, or to sell it at such a price as will induce the capitalist to buy it for the purpose of conversion, or from some other cause, this conversion process has failed to afford the income which in the present temporary exigency is necessary for the public service. For many weeks past the subscriptions to the conversion loan have fallen to less than half what they were; and they have shown no prospect of improvement.

In this state of things, the Government of India, having the public service to provide for, had no choice but to adopt some change of measure by which it could hope to obtain the requisite funds before the cash balances should become exhausted. The Governor General in Council did not doubt that the rate of six per cent., which Government were paying, was ample interest to induce the capitalist to subscribe. But it was apparent that from some cause or other, the requisite funds, even at that rate, could no longer be procured exclusively through the medium of holders of four per cent. stock. There was therefore nothing to be done but to look for subscriptions either through the medium of some other class, or from capitalists generally.

In this state of things the Governor General in Council resolved on the 26th January last, to adopt a new arrangement in respect to the loan, from the commencement of the approaching financial year. Accordingly he gave notice of the closing on the 30th of April next of the four per cent. conversion arrangement. By this warning all remaining holders of that stock for whose benefit it may be to take advantage of that arrangement, will still have full opportunity of so doing. Up to the end of the current commercial year, holders of four per cent. paper will still have it in their power, on subscribing to the open loan, to obtain six per cent. for the cash subscribed.

In order to throw open the door in some manner to the general capitalist, Treasury bills, bearing a somewhat lower rate of interest, were issued; and the Governor General in Council, looking to the very large extraordinary expenditure which must still remain to be incurred in the coming year, made application to the right hon. the Secretary of State for India for assistance in the way of bullion remittances from home, to the extent of three millions sterling.

It had been the wish of the Governor General in Council to await the answer of the Secretary of State, which may be expected by the 1st of May; as also to allow time to show practically what may be expected as the result of the above-mentioned measures, before determining upon the course to be adopted on the 1st of May for the service of the coming year. By the late fluctuations in the stock market, though the manifest result of an unfounded and happily short-lived panic, and the representations of the mercantile community, who are of opinion that in the present state of the market uncertainty as to the future financial operations of Government would be a great evil, have induced his Excellency in Council to anticipate the determination of this question, and to announce at once the arrangement which it is his intention to make in India for the service of the year 1859-60.

Reductions in the present enormous war charges will be made as early and to as great an extent as may be safe. Measures will be taken for the permanent increase of the Indian revenues as largely as may be consistent with sound policy. But the full benefit of these operations will not be felt in 1859-60.

The Governor General in Council hereby announces that the amount of money for which he will look to the Indian market to be raised by loan in order to provide for the service of 1859-60, is five crores of rupees. When this amount shall have been realised, the loan of 1859-60 will be closed, and no further loan will be opened in India during that year.

In pursuance of the principle adopted on the 20th of July, 1857, the loan to be opened on the 1st May next will be a five and a-half per cent. loan, to which subscriptions will be receivable in cash, or half in cash, and half in five per cent. paper.

If this loan should not produce the required amount, the Governor General in Council will recommend to the right honourable the Secretary of State that the deficiency should be supplied from England. No loan carrying a higher rate of interest will be open in India in the course of the year 1859-60, unless under instructions from the home government.

The issue of Treasury bills, on the terms notified on the 26th of January, 1859, will be closed on the 30th of April: a new issue of Treasury bills will be notified from the 1st of May, bearing interest at the rate of two and a-half per centum per diem.

The sum which may be received upon these notes will not be counted as a part of the five crores which the Government desire to raise by loan.

Published by order of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council,
 C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
 Secretary to the Government of India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

WEDNESDAY, March 30, 1859.

SICK AND WOUNDED OFFICERS.

THOUGH much has been done of late for sick and disabled soldiers, the scarcely less pitiable condition of wounded subalterns does not appear to have attracted the slightest amount of public sympathy. That the private and the non-commissioned officer should receive the most tender and careful nursing, whether suffering from wounds or stricken by disease, is only just and reasonable, and any shortcoming in this respect would indicate a mean and base ingratitude on the part of the nation. It is well, therefore, that this much of thought has been taken for the gallant defenders of their country, but something more yet remains to be done. As a general rule, officers of the royal army are possessed of private means which enable them to maintain their position as gentlemen, a feat which no amount of economy could achieve if they trusted to their pay alone. But even the expenses of medical treatment, especially where surgical operations have to be performed, are oftentimes ruinous to the young subaltern, usually in advance of his income. Far worse, however, is the case of officers of the Indian Army, who seldom have any property of their own, and are consequently compelled to exercise much forethought in order to "make the two ends meet," on the reduced allowances payable to them east of the Cape. While in the enjoyment of health it is just possible for them to live in a quiet and moderate manner; but if they have come home on sick certificate, they have no alternative but to exceed their income, or to deny themselves the best medical treatment. They are thus constrained to content themselves with the pottering skill of some village apothecary, or with the scarcely less dangerous timidity—or rashness—of a country practitioner, perhaps totally inexperienced in the treatment of gun-shot wounds, and quite as little versed in the diseases engendered by a hot climate. The hardship is one of daily recurrence. Since the outbreak of the mutinies in India very many officers have been sent home, exhausted by fatigue and exposure, or crippled in action with the foe. Their recovery has depended on unremitting attention, on the highest order of medical skill, and sometimes on the most delicate operations. For all this money is wanted, and in no stinted measure; but how was this to be furnished out of a net income not exceeding £100 a-year? Truly the lot of the private is preferable. He at least is certain that all that science can accomplish will be exerted in his favour, and that if he finally succumb it will be because his cure is beyond the province of human knowledge. But why should the State take less care of its officers than of its private soldiers? No one asks that they shall be tended altogether gratuitously, though even that would be no exorbitant demand. Let there be a sliding scale of charges according to their regimental rank and pay, but in return give them the option of availing themselves of the best treatment which the medical department of the British army can afford. Why should there not be an officers' ward to every military hospital, accessible to officers of every branch of the Imperial service? If this suggestion be, from any cause, impracticable, at least let some steps be taken to mitigate the mental and bodily sufferings of those who have done their duty to their country in the noble and chivalrous manner characteristic of the British officer.

PATCHWORK.

ON Friday last, March the 25th, Lord Ellenborough called the attention of her Majesty's Ministers to the deplorable condition of the Indian exchequer. All sorts of expedients had been resorted to in the vain hope of supplying the ever-growing deficiency, but to no purpose. The expenditure of the Indian Government has assumed the form and dimensions of a bottomless abyss. It is like those four things mentioned by Solomon, which are never satisfied, and which never say, "It is enough." The more money that is raised, the more urgent appears to be the necessity for an additional supply. Only the other day the Secretary of State for India created a painful sensation in the House of Commons, and an uneasy feeling in commercial circles, by applying for power to raise a loan of seven millions in this country to meet the deficiency in the financial year 1859-60. Before this Bill could be passed, though no opposition was made to it, intelligence has been received of the financial vagaries of the Governor-General in Council. Having failed to obtain sufficient subscriptions to the five per cent. loan, though on terms that were equal to an additional one per cent., recourse was had to Exchequer Bills at 5½ per cent. But when the native capitalists, puzzled and rendered distrustful by these repeated changes, or expecting still more advantageous terms, continued to stand aloof, a Government notification is issued announcing a new loan of five millions at 5½ per cent. Lord Canning seems, indeed, to have felt that confidence was not likely to be restored by this fresh appeal for money—rem, quocunque modo rem—and consequently added an assurance that no further loans would be opened for the present year, unless in obedience to instructions from England. It is not often that one is able to laugh over financial statements, but there is something irresistibly comical in the style of this Beggar's Appeal. It is precisely in the manner of a fast young man applying to the friend upon whom he habitually sponges for yet another £10, having already promised a dozen times that he would never again trouble him. "Only this once, my dear fellow, and I pledge you my honour I won't ask you for another shilling for months to come—unless that confounded tailor duns me for last year's bill, or that thief of a scrivener presses me for something on account." Of what value can such assurances be in the eyes of the native community when they consider the financial system that has been pursued for some years past in India? The word "system," indeed, is a misnomer, for no systematic action has been instituted or followed. Whenever money has been wanted, and that has been a matter of frequent occurrence, a loan has been opened, and thus the annual expenditure, and consequently the annual deficit, has gone on steadily increasing. To such a height has this recklessness now attained, that while the Home Government are appealing to British capitalists for an amount assumed to be sufficient for the requirements of the year, the Indian Government is having recourse to native capitalists, on almost any terms, to stop the gaps that present themselves from day to day. It is now admitted that at least three, and probably five millions more must be raised in this country, independently of the seven millions voted by the House of Commons. We do not, and cannot, impute any blame in this matter to the noble lord the Secretary of State for India. It was manifestly impossible that he could have anticipated such fatuous blundering on the part of Lord Canning or his financial advisers. But we do earnestly hope that the noble lord will now take heart of grace, and gather courage for a bold and comprehensive measure. The further continuance of these reiterated patchings and make-shifts can result in nothing but disgrace and bankruptcy. There is but one course to pursue, and it is one that at once recommends itself to every honest and straightforward Englishman. Take the bull by the horns. Face the difficulty boldly and firmly. Tell the people of England, without further circumlocution, that sooner or later they must make good the deficiencies of the Indian revenue. The only question is, will they undertake ninety or one hundred millions now, or wait till the debt is two hundred millions? That is the real and only question at issue. By prompt action it is still possible to restore the balance of Indian finance—a few years later it will be impossible to do so. Let the House of Commons at once affirm that the Indian debt is guaranteed by this country, and the interest may immediately be reduced to 3½ per cent. Let there be no more a confusion of loans, some in India, some in England. The loss of native subscribers need cause no regrets or dismal anticipations. Revolutionists will not be deterred from rebellion by the possession of Company's Paper or Funds, or the Rajah of Bithoor would never have joined the mutineers. A paper currency, indeed, is more likely to produce a consolidation of interests; but too small a proportion of native capitalists will ever be induced to invest money in Government securities, to affect in any way the stability of the British empire in the East. But not only would we have the existing debt transferred bodily to the funded debt of Great Britain, we also trust that a loan of twenty or thirty millions may be opened, for the purpose of prosecuting remunerative public works in India. It is not by pettifoggery taxes on stamps and tobacco that the annual deficit can be avoided, but through the operation of good roads, extended irrigation, the development of the mineral and agricultural resources, and cheap and expeditious transit. A strict economy must likewise be introduced, the army brought down to a peace standard, and the settlement of Europeans on the hills warmly encouraged. What is really needed is a bold and powerful intellect that shall grapple, with a firm grasp, with the difficulties of the crisis, and not fence and play with them in a dilettante manner, as if sufficient for the day was the evil thereof. The statesman who would save India from irretrievable ruin must be daring in counsel, rapid and resolute in execution. It is too late to make things pleasant, but there is yet time to retrieve the past and make secure the future by an honest and single-minded policy that shall be open to no reproach.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LATE OVERSIGHT.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—That article among your leaders in the Mail of the 16th inst., headed "An Oversight or a Wrong," calls for the acknowledgments of the retired field officers of H.M.'s East Indian artillery and engineers; at least of those veterans among them who have been so much and so long superseded; and I only hope it may be seen and well pondered in the proper quarters. It is a farce to talk of assimilating the Home and Indian services, and yet to leave such a disparity existing as the one you describe. The privilege of not being superseded by their juniors in the effective ranks of the corps has long been enjoyed by the retired field officers of the Artillery, Engineers, and Marines of H.M.'s Army; the warrant of Oct. 14, to which you allude, was merely repeating it; and the omission of any mention of the retired officers of those branches in H.M.'s Indian army must have been rather the fault of the Secretary at War, or the Royal Commission, than of Lord Stanley, who has nothing to do immediately with rank or promotion in the army of India, though it will devolve on him perhaps to point out to the proper authorities the oversight complained of, in order to its being rectified. From the very old dates of rank of many of the retired full-pay Indian field officers, it will be rather difficult to ascertain exactly how they would have stood had the rule in question been in existence all along (as in the Queen's); but without noticing all the intermediate promotions, it will be easy enough (and in nearly every case quite satisfactory) to take the different corps of the three Presidencies (Engineers and Artillery) as they are now, and place each retired regimental field officer in his proper position as to rank, that is, just above (but of same date with) his next junior now living in the effective strength of the corps.

The curious innovation that took effect from Nov., 1854, of giving a step in rank to every retiring full-pay officer throughout the army (above the grade of subaltern), whether his last commission was by brevet or actual, adds to the difficulty in some measure; in fact, I have a notion that to carry out the newly-sought boon properly, that system must be discontinued, and the honorary rank cancelled in our cases; for by it many of us supersede our late comrades remaining in the service, which is contrary both to right and reason. How much better would it have been to have given all retired full-pay field officers their one step of honorary rank only on the promotion of their next junior of the same rank, and to have carried it on ad infinitum in the scientific branches as in the Royal army.

The only officers who would just now be benefited by the application of the (to us) new rule, are the old retired veterans who were included in the first large batch promoted one step under date Nov., 1854 (see Gazette of Feb. 6, 1855). Such as have retired since then have mostly got quite the start of their brethren in the service, and for years to come would derive no advantage from the boon now sought. Several of them held only brevet rank on retiring; some who were but majors regimentally (or had only just got the lieutenant-colonelcy) are, by the help of the numerous and rapid brevets of late (especially in Bengal), general officers!

Taking, therefore, the honorary major-generals, colonels, and lieutenant-colonels of Nov. 28, 1854, of the Artillery and Engineers (three Presidencies), I find there are three major-generals (retired colonels), twenty-seven colonels (retired lieutenant-colonels), and twenty-five lieutenant-colonels (retired majors), who were promoted on that occasion. Some few of these, even, had only brevet rank on retiring; and, curious enough, one or two of them, though somehow promoted in that Gazette, and with that date, actually had not retired at the time, nor for a month or two after! Even of the above fifty-five, therefore, not all of them would come under the operation of the new scheme, but rather have to descend. The results would be something like the following:—

- 1 major-general would become a lieutenant-general.
- 2 " " would gain older commissions of major-generals.
- 10 colonels would become major-generals.
- 2 " " would gain rank.
- 12 " " would be just where they are.
- 3 " " would go back to lieutenant-colonels.
- 13 lieutenant-colonels would become major-generals.
- 10 " " would become colonels.
- 2 " " would be as they are.

The officers, not a few in the whole lists (since 1854), who would descend in rank properly under the new system, might be allowed to retain their several ranks, but only as honorary, and to be placed at the bottom of their grades.

These few hints from yours very faithfully,

A LIEUT.-COLONEL,

BUT CLAIMING TO BE MAJOR-GENERAL,
Retired List.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 22.

LORD CANNING.

Mr. SALISBURY asked the Secretary of State for India if the despatch No. 5, 1858, dated the 9th December, having been submitted to the Indian Council for consideration before its transmission to Lord Canning, had met with the sanction and approval of that body or otherwise?

LORD STANLEY said that the despatch in question was sent out by the secret department—that was to say, it was sent out on the responsibility of the Secretary of State. He had communicated it to the council for their information, but he did not submit it for their consideration, nor was any opinion passed upon it by them.

Mr. SALISBURY: Did not the council protest against that despatch before it was sent out?

LORD STANLEY: No protest whatever has been received from any quarter.

Sir G. LEWIS wished to know why the despatch was sent out from the secret department, seeing it did not—as the Act required that all such despatches so sent should—relate to questions of war and peace or to the foreign relations of the country?

LORD STANLEY said the former despatch had been sent through the secret committee, and, as he had before stated, this despatch was sent through the secret committee also.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MARCH 25.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH moved that there be laid before the House copies of all the notifications issued by the Governor-General of India in Council from the commencement of 1857 to the present time relative to the terms on which the Government of India would receive money on loan, and to call the attention of the House to the state of the money-market in India, as affected by the more recent of such notifications. In drawing the attention of the House to this subject, he could not refrain from commenting on the continued fall of the public securities in India since last Jan. This unparalleled depression was not, in his opinion, to be attributed to political difficulties, but to the mode in which the Indian Government had attempted to raise money. So great had these difficulties become, that it was reported that the salaries of Government officers in Oude had not been paid, but only that part which was called subsistence money. The embarrassments of the Indian Government had been increased by their depreciation of former stock in endeavouring to raise fresh loans. It was stated that in raising a loan at 5½ per cent. they had allowed the holders of 4 per cent. stock, in subscribing to the new loan, to pay the 4 per cent. stock in at par. The steps the Government of India had taken to remedy these evils had been totally inadequate, and they had at last reached that point that it was absolutely necessary for the Government of this country to come to their assistance. He thought her Majesty's Government would have been justified in asking for means to raise £12,000,000 at once instead of only £7,000,000. He thought that this course must ultimately be adopted, and hoped to hear a confirmation of his views from her Majesty's Government. It struck him, however, as strange that, after all we had heard of free trade, in buying money we always contrived to do so in the dearest market.

LORD DERBY regretted that the Indian finances were not so prosperous as could be wished, and confirmed the extremely lucid and accurate statement of Lord Ellenborough. In respect to the question of open loans, he had great doubts as to their propriety, for he thought nothing could be more objectionable than keeping up an open loan of indefinite amount at a specified rate of interest. He was sorry to inform the House that it would be necessary to ask Parliament this session for power to raise a further sum for Indian purposes. He proceeded to explain the correspondence which had taken place between the Governor General and her Majesty's Government on the subject of these financial difficulties, and observed that a deficit of £11,500,000, in round numbers, had to be provided for. Deducting £1,000,000 that would shortly be forwarded to India, there would remain £10,500,000, which would be further reduced by another million from a reserve fund of £12,000,000. This would leave £9,500,000, which the Governor General proposed to reduce to £8,000,000 by imposing a slight tax on imports, stamps, and home-grown tobacco. These eight millions were to be paid off by a loan in India of £5,000,000, and the Governor General looked to this country to forward £3,000,000 in addition to what had been already forwarded. Under these circumstances, her Majesty's Government had come to the conclusion that it would be necessary to ask for leave to raise a further sum than the £7,000,000 at first contemplated. What the exact sum would be he could not yet say; it would be at least £3,000,000, and perhaps £5,000,000. This was exclusive of prize money and compensation. Looking to the effects of railways in India, he concluded that the gloomy state of Indian finances would soon assume a brighter hue. As to the report about the retention of salaries of officers in Oude he had received no information. The only information he had received was that the Indian Government intended to raise a 5½ per cent. loan. He deprecated any attacks on the Government because they had not at once asked for the whole of the sum since found to be necessary, as it was impossible for the Government then to foresee the present demand.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE attributed the financial embarrassment in India to maladministration rather than to the recent mutiny, and insisted on a complete change in the financial system of that Government.

The Earl of ALBEMARLE was of opinion that not only the financial system but the entire system of government in India must be revised; but he protested against the doctrine that England must make good the deficiencies in the revenues of India.

LORD MONTEAGLE believed that the people of England would do well to accustom themselves to the idea that they are responsible for the debts of India. Without the exercise of great economy, it would be impossible to restore the balance of Indian finance.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH suggested that the Government should send out a competent person from the Treasury, the Board of Customs, and the Board of Trade, to institute a real investigation into the accounts and finances of India.

The Earl of DERBY expressed his approval of Lord Ellenborough's suggestion, and stated that the Government had taken into consideration the propriety of sending out an efficient person to make such an investigation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 25.

THE COUNCIL OF INDIA.

Mr. V. SMITH rose to ask the Secretary of State for India to lay on the table any minutes or regulations he had made for the transaction of business in the Council of India, under the 20th section of the Act 21st and 22nd Vict., c. 106. The right hon. gentleman said that in the course of the discussions last year upon the India Bill the noble lord the Secretary for India had told them that he proposed to adopt such regulations as might be found convenient for the division of labour among the members of the Indian Council; and it appeared to him to be desirable that they should at present learn how far that determination of the noble lord had been carried into effect. A case had recently arisen which showed the advantage which would follow from their possession of accurate knowledge upon that point. The noble lord had addressed an important despatch, dated the 9th of December, to Lord Canning, which had recently been laid upon the table; and he thought it was very desirable that they should know whether that document had been the production of the noble lord alone, or whether it had received the sanction of the Indian Council.

Mr. SALISBURY wished to ask the noble lord the Secretary for India the questions of which he had given notice—namely, whether he had received Lord Canning's despatch, No. 264, of 1858, and dated the 17th June; also, if any minute or memorandum had been placed upon the books of the Indian Council in respect of the despatch No. 5, of 1858, and dated the 9th of December; and, if so, whether the Government were prepared to lay a copy of such minute or memorandum on the table of the House. He had been informed that the despatch alluded to in the first part of the question had been received in this country before Parliament was prorogued, and, therefore, ought to have been submitted to the House; and, also, that when the despatch of the 9th of December was submitted by the noble lord to the Indian Council, although there was no positive declaration upon the subject, yet it was the opinion of the council that that despatch ought not to have been sent out.

Lord STANLEY said that he had no objection to lay upon the table of the House the minutes which had been referred to. It was merely a minute authorising the division of the council into committees for the transaction of business with greater facility. The arrangement in no way interfered with the power vested by the House in the Secretary of State of sending out despatches upon his own responsibility in connection with the secret department; but he quite accepted the suggestion that some indication should be made to the council that such despatches had been sent out, and it was a mere inadvertence that that system had not been adopted before. With respect to the question of the hon. member below him (Mr. Salisbury), all he could say was, that the despatch to which he alluded did not reach him until the 4th of August, when Parliament was not sitting, and when, of course, it could not be submitted to it. But it was thought unnecessary that any delay should take place in consequence, and that it would be far better if the Governor General of India were made acquainted with the opinion of the Government at once. With respect to the second question, the only paper which touched upon it was a minute of the political committee to which this branch of the subject was referred. No protest was made against the despatch he had sent out to the Governor General of India, and no protest could have been made, because the despatch was sent out in the secret department, on the responsibility of the Secretary of State for India. The House would not expect him on the present occasion to enter into a defence of his conduct. He stated, distinctly and plainly, that nothing could have been further from his mind at the time of writing that despatch, or at any other time, than to take any steps which might give personal offence to, or which would be calculated to wound the feelings of, his noble friend Lord Canning. If there had been any such effect, he could only say that he very much regretted it; but with regard to the expression of opinion contained in the despatch, he could only say that it was an opinion formed after a deliberate judgment, and it was the duty of a person holding the office which he had the honour to hold to take care that the views of the Government were fully and unequivocally expressed to the noble lord.

SCINDE RAILWAY.

The report of the directors of this company states that the prosecution of the undertaking proceeds in such a manner as to justify their expectation of having the whole of the Scinde line completed in the course of next year. The remainder of the permanent way material and a large additional portion of the rolling stock has been shipped for Kurrachee. On the 31st of January last a small portion of the line was opened for the use of the railway between the landing place, near the harbour, and the workshops of the company at the town and camp of Kurrachee. The measures hitherto adopted by the Government for working the coal field near Kotree, the upper terminus of the line, have not been so successful as to warrant an entire dependence on that source for a supply of fuel. The importance and capacity of the harbour of Kurrachee is now generally acknowledged. The Secretary of State for India in Council has sent instructions for the immediate commencement of the works at Kurrachee. The trade of the port and the population of the town continue to increase in an almost unprecedented manner. The report on the Indus Steam Flotilla states that the trial trip was made in the early part of last month, and the result was in the highest degree satisfactory. The boat is flat-bottomed, having two engines of 120 nominal horse power, and a deck-house which almost covers the entire vessel. Her length over all is 200 feet, her beam thirty-eight feet, and draught of water one foot ten inches. As a passenger-boat, and with average cargo, her speed is equal to thirteen miles an hour, and with barges containing 500 tons cargo in tow she can give an average speed of eight miles an hour. Messrs. Richardson and Co., of Stockton, are now under contract to deliver at Kurrachee before the end of this year six additional steamers similar to the model vessel, with seven accommodation flats. In addition to the above, six tug-boats and thirty-three cargo barges have been for some time under construction at Liverpool, and two of the steamers are packed and ready for shipment. One of these vessels was recently tested on the Mersey, her draught was seventeen inches, and speed in still water averaged eight miles an hour, towing four barges carrying 450 tons. It is considered that these vessels are not only of the utmost importance for the conveyance of the permanent way materials for the Punjab Railway, but are well adapted to meet the commercial requirements of the countries drained by the Indus and its tributaries. Since the last report, the contract with the Secretary of State for India in Council with this company has been executed, granting, with other privileges, the guarantee of 5 per cent. per annum upon such additional capital as may be required to complete the flotilla, in addition to £250,000 already guaranteed.

The report on the Punjab Railway states that the construction of the earthworks on the line between Lahore and Umritsir had been proceeded with by means of native contractors in a highly satisfactory manner, at a moderate cost. It is believed that this portion of the line, thirty-two miles in length, will be ready for rolling stock in the course of next year. Arrangements are being made for proceeding with the construction of the line to Mooltan. The directors have, on the part of the shareholders, accepted the contract for a line 270 miles in length from Lahore to Delhi, traversing generally a fertile, level, and populous country, with a large existing traffic, nearly the whole of which, there is every reason to believe, will pass over the Punjab and Scinde Railways to Kurrachee. Every facility has been afforded by the Governments of Scinde and the Punjab for the prosecution of the undertakings of this company in their respective provinces. The capital account of the Scinde Railway shows that £841,735 had been received, and £537,233 expended, leaving a balance of £304,502. The capital of the Indus Flotilla Company shows that £80,140 had been received and £16,819 expended, leaving a balance of £63,321. The capital account of the Punjab Railway shows that £165,198 had been received, and £13,138 expended, leaving a balance of £451,070.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—At the usual weekly meeting of the society, held on the 23rd inst., J. B. Smith, Esq., in the chair, the paper read was "On Cotton in India; its present growth, and prospects of future supplies to this country," by Dr. J. Forbes Watson. The author said that, in endeavouring to illustrate the capabilities of India for the growth of cotton, two lines of inquiry naturally presented themselves. In the first place, it was necessary to show that the climate and soil were suitable, and could afford the fundamental elements necessary to the full development of the plant. In the second, he had to reply to the practical question—to what extent is cotton cultivated in India? In reference to the first point, he proceeded to investigate the various peculiarities of soil and climate which so vast a country as Hindostan necessarily possesses. Detailed analyses of the different soils were given, which tended to show that a very large extent of the country was either at present adapted for cotton cultivation, or might be rendered so by irrigation and other means. There was reason to believe that from time immemorial the cotton plant had been grown in all parts of India, and had always afforded suitable covering to the people of the country. It was calculated that there could not now be less than 24,000,000 of acres under cotton cultivation, though these calculations were necessarily based on data involving some degree of uncertainty. With regard to the quality of the cotton produced, though doubtless that known as New Orleans cotton was more suitable for many branches of our manufacture, he believed he was correct in stating that it was now generally admitted that Indian cotton, with all its imperfections, was capable of being employed in the production of 75 per cent. of our manufactures. It was most desirable, however, that the New Orleans variety of the cotton plant should, as far as possible, be cultivated in India, and this subject, for nearly fifty years, had received the earnest attention of the Government. The experiments that had been made had certainly shown that this variety might be successfully introduced in many districts, if sufficient care was bestowed on its cultivation, but the author was of opinion that the most important point was to extend the cultivation of an article which, though not of so fine a quality, was still practically available for most purposes. One great difficulty was the want of an adequate means of transit, but this there was now every reason to hope would be supplied, and indeed he felt justified in the conclusion that the day was not so very far distant when India will render in abundance, not only cotton, but every product of the vegetable kingdom required either in art or manufacture. A discussion ensued, in which Mr. J. G. Frith, Dr. Riddell, Professor George Wilson, Mr. Bryce, Colonel Sykes, M. P., and the Chairman, took part.

THE REVENUE OF INDIA.—A return to the House of Lords, printed on Friday, shows that for four years there has been a net deficit in the revenue of India, after deducting the charges in England. This deficit is set down as follows,—viz., in 1853-54, £2,044,117; in 1854-55, £1,707,364; in 1855-56, £972,791; in 1856-57, £143,597. In 1847-48, there was a net deficit of £1,011,986; and in 1848-49, of £1,473,225. In four years (1849-50 to 1852-53) there was a continuous surplus, varying from £354,187 to £531,265. The deficit appears to arise from the charges in England being included, as otherwise there has been a large net surplus in India itself over 1847-48, varying from £1,104,086, to £3,386,076; thus, in 1856-57, the total income was £20,702,854, and the expenditure £26,316,778, leaving a net surplus of £3,386,076. The total debt of India on the 30th of April, 1857, amounted to £52,074,986, and the annual interest actually paid to £2,100,554. The registered debt is £45,369,120. Treasury notes figure for £1,126,644, temporary loans for £210,656, and deposits for £5,359,566. The sum total of the balances in all the treasuries in India amounted, on the said 30th of April, 1857, to £13,000,664, or Rs. 13,87,69,749.

RECRUITING FOR THE INDIAN FORCES.—It appears from a return just issued that the number of recruits now in England for her Majesty's Indian service consists of 86 cavalry, 231 infantry, and 283 artillery, making a total, inclusive of 143 for Engineers, of 743. The same return shows that during the last six years 4,379 recruits were raised for the artillery, 11,315 for the infantry, and 3,535 for the cavalry, making together 19,229 recruits.

"Auckland, N.Z., Nov. 19, 1858.
"A lady to whom I gave some of your invaluable Cough Lozenges, and likewise several members of her family, who were troubled with severe coughs and colds (especially the youngest child, who had a hard croupy cough) have experienced great relief, and speak of them in the highest terms. One of my own children, too, who was troubled in like manner, has taken them with the greatest advantage. On account of their pleasant taste, children will readily take them, when they will not take other medicines. I may add that the lady above referred to informed me that she had frequently purchased them, when residing in India, of Messrs. Treacher and Co., Bombay."

This Company has been formed for the purchase of the freehold landed estate of 152 acres, together with the machinery, plant, and the coal, ironstone, and minerals thereunder; as also under 119 acres of land adjoining, embracing five seams of first-rate coal, together nearly 900 acres, adapted for house, gas, coke, and manufacturing purposes.

The property is situated in the parish of Whittington, near Chesterfield, on a branch of the Midland Railway, and near the Chesterfield Canal.

The Colliery is raising above 750 tons per week, which is contracted for by highly respectable firms, whilst the machinery is capable of raising 1,000 tons per week; and as soon as the lower seams are reached, the outlay for which is provided for in the capital of £60,000, at least 2,000 tons per week, independently of the ironstone, will be raised.

The present returns from the land, colliery, and ironstone, after all deductions, will give a net profit of 16 per cent. to the shareholders, and when the workings are extended (within two years) nearly double that profit may be relied on.

By the arrangements for the purchase, £20,000 remain on mortgage over a period of years, and not more than £2 will be called up for the first twelve months, and £3 during the second year, beyond which it is not expected further calls will be made.

Full particulars, together with the valuations and estimates of Messrs. J. Flock and Walker, Hushchurst, and others, and the calculations of an experienced mineral agent, will appear in the prospectus, which, with forms of application, may be had at the offices of the Company, and the respective solicitors and brokers, to whom applications for shares are to be addressed.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This publication stands on quite a different ground from the other monthlies, and affects no rivalry with them. We beg to add our own recommendation to those it has already received. Though the conductors disclaim the idea of filling any vacuum, they certainly do so. They evidently also possess good information, and deal with most of their topics in a serious and searching spirit.—Press, March 5, 1859.

If it proves to be, what from the first number seems likely, a publication appealing more to the higher class of readers, whose wants are at present only supplied by the Quarterly Reviews, its chances of success will certainly be very considerable. There is no conceivable reason why articles written by and addressed to thoughtful men should only make their appearance four times in the twelvemonth, but, on the contrary, every reason to suppose that a monthly collection of such would meet with a ready and extensive sale. The purely political articles are on "Indian Finance" and "Parliament and the People," the last, especially, very ably written.—Globe, March 2, 1859.

First of all, let us bid welcome to the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," published by Messrs. Allen and Co., of 7, Leadenhall-street. It is sought to establish a sort of English "Revue des deux Mondes." This design is strictly carried out.—Literary Gazette, March 5, 1859.

Its articles, which are of a thoroughly miscellaneous character, are promising enough.—John Bull, March 5, 1859.

It is a new monthly magazine, that brings itself modestly into the world without any flaming announcement of the wonders it intends to do. . . . We are very glad to see in the first number a quality which gives it a full title to existence, viz., good sense, as opposed to the ordinary affectation of omniscience, superciliousness, or an unflagging vis comica. . . . We welcome any novelty in literature which promises to be sensible, well-informed, and gentlemanlike. There are several articles of merit in this number. That on "Literature and Life" is perhaps the best. Its remarks on Mr. B. Hope's notion of making literature a profession are perfectly sound. The very clever and much-wanted article against the silliness of our present Christmas pieces for the stage should be read by all who fancy they like going to see such things. The article on "Parliamentary Reform" we have had occasion to notice elsewhere; that on "Indian Finance" deserves attention; and that on "Hallam" is sure to get it without deserving it so much.—Spectator, March 5, 1859.

The first number of a new monthly publication, the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," deserves a cordial welcome. Professedly based upon the plan of the "Revue des deux Mondes," it exhibits much of the scholarly spirit, the freedom and independence of thought, and the thorough geniality of tone, which mark its distinguished prototype. The opening article on "Literature and Life" is remarkable, hitting the case to a nicety, taking the middle course between the reckless Mohockism of Bohemia, and the affected kid-glove refinement of the Saturday Review. All the articles are excellent; but I would specially point out a well-deserved attack on "Christmas Pieces," a biographical notice of "Hallam," and a review of Owen Meredith's "Wanderer."—Literary Lounger in the Illustrated Times, March 5, 1859.

The best brief notion we can give of the publication is to say that it promises to become to the English reader what the Revue des deux Mondes is to the French, with an indefinitely wider latitude of topics and freedom of opinion. The soundness of its judgment on the question of Parliamentary Reform is displayed in the ablest and most thoroughly constitutional article that has yet appeared in any of our periodicals on the subject—an article which acquires additional value from the fact that it foreshadowed the whole of the scheme of the Government two days before the Reform Bill was brought forward. Let us have at least one English periodical, written with integrity and good taste, to which we may confidently look for fearless and honest opinions. The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" promises to realise those expectations, and we heartily wish it the success which it deserves.—Home News, March 3, 1859.

It may with truth be said of it (the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW"), that the opening number promises well. There is a good healthy, manly tone about it (no small thing), and literary ability of no common order. We heartily wish it success.—Overland Mail, March 3, 1859.

The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" seems to combine, in an eminent degree, the amusement of the monthlies and the grave literature of the quarterly reviews. We regret that we cannot devote more space to the work, for we could not praise it more than its merits deserve.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette.

The papers are well written.—Patriot.

All the articles are written in an unaffected, free, and genuine style, on subjects of general current interest, not of common place material. The article on "Henry Hallam" is made truly interesting.—National Standard.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

By the Bombay mail of the 12th of March, we learn that Brigadier Horsford has returned into the British territory, being unable to pursue the rebels any further, owing to want of carriage and mountain artillery. The fugitives are reported to have fled into the Gorruckpore Passes, in a state of utter disorganisation.

In Central India Tantia Topee has disappeared, after assuming the name of Ram Sing. His followers are said to have dispersed in all directions, while Rao Sahib has tendered his submission, and claimed to be included in the terms of the royal amnesty.

The Bheels of Guzerat alone appear to be really troublesome, and it must be admitted that they have some reason to complain of the harsh treatment to which they have been subjected. Several indecisive skirmishes have taken place, but without producing any other result than that of augmenting the exasperation, and even the confidence, of the insurgents.

The Rohillas in the Nizam's dominions, though still ready to take advantage of any opportunity for indulging in riot and outrage, are kept in awe by the strong force that has been sent against them. It is probable that it will be long before disturbances cease to be caused by those fierce marauders.

The unsettled state of India, and the lurking animosity between the native and foreign races, have been painfully illustrated by the murder of two railway officials near Kirwee. Small bands of rebels, or robbers, continue to infest the Upper Provinces, and render life and property insecure even in the neighbourhood of European stations.

The Commander in Chief was to leave Lucknow on the 1st March for Umballa, whence his lordship proposed to proceed to Simla for the benefit of his health. Bronchitis appears to be the complaint from which he chiefly suffers. In another part of this paper we give Lord Clyde's farewell address to such of her Majesty's regiments as are about to return to this country after a distinguished and glorious career in the far East.

The total abolition of the use of the leather stock by the royal troops, and by her Majesty's Indian forces, will be hailed as a tardy homage to common sense and public opinion.

Sir John Lawrence arrived in Bombay on the 9th March, and is among the passengers to England by the present mail. His reception will certainly be gratifying to himself and worthy of the great services he has rendered to his country.

The Bombay papers mention a visit from the Governor General of Portuguese India, who was received with all due honours, and entertained as a guest, at Government House, Parell.

Much dissatisfaction has been expressed at the conduct of the Bombay Government towards the Rajah of Jamkhundee. That young chieftain has lately been released, after a twelvemonth's confinement on suspicion. His liberation is described as being effected in a manner as insulting as his imprisonment was unjust and illegal—at least, if the statements of the Bombay journals are supported by facts.

The financial crisis shows no signs of amendment. The Indian Government is driven to extremity for funds to meet immediate demands, and it is even hinted that a temporary suspension of cash payments is by no means impossible.

A very important document appears in our present issue. It is no other than a Royal Warrant regulating the promotion of combatant officers in her Majesty's Indian forces. We beg to draw the attention of our military readers to a paper of such great interest to themselves.

GOVERNMENT MESSAGES.

From the Political Secretary, Bombay, to J. Cosmo Melvill, Esq.

CENTRAL INDIA.

Intelligence has just been received from Seronge that the rebels with the Rao Sahib crossed the Betwa on the night of the 7th inst., and are at Mehidpoor; that the agent of the Rao has come in to arrange for his submission, agreeably to the Royal proclamation.

It is also reported that Feroze Shah is not with the rebel force.

Major General Michel is moving on Bhopal. Bombay Castle, March 11.

EAST INDIA RAILWAYS.—A very interesting return has been made, showing the number of miles of new roads or navigable canals opened for traffic in the several presidencies of India since the year 1848, and the total amount of money expended on their construction. We give the results of the return. The cost of construction is given in rupees.

EUROPEAN AND INDIAN JUNCTION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—A special report has been issued by the directors of the European and Indian Junction Telegraph Company, in which it is announced that in consequence of the Turkish Government having determined themselves to attempt to construct the telegraph from Constantinople to Bussorah, and the Council of India having decided that the Government of India shall prepare and lay down the cable from Bussorah to Kurrachee, it is proposed at once to divide the remaining funds in hand, which will allow a return of 5s. per share, after an equitable deduction for expenses. Shareholders who are desirous of complying with this recommendation are to deliver their scrip at the offices of the company on and after the 11th instant. Although for the present it is remarked that the agency of this company will not be required for constructing the telegraph to India by the Persian Gulf, measures, it seems, have been taken for preserving the company as a corporation, so as to be in a position to carry the object contemplated should an opportunity offer. The capital received was £9,826, which together with interest, £607, from the National Discount Company and £18 for sale of stores, makes a total of £10,450. Of this amount £5,150 has been expended, leaving £5,300 to be divided in the way proposed.

TANTIA TOPEE.—Native, but rather circumstantial, reports, says the Delhi Gazette, state that Tania Topee, under the travelling name of Ramsing, had separated himself from the Rao Sahib's camp, near Deedwarra, in Bhikaneer, with a few principal men and about 200 followers; they were supposed to be moving about stealthily through part of Scindiah's country, with a view of concealing themselves in Bundelcund or Jahloun.

THE BHIKANEER TROOPS.—The Lahore Chronicle learns that the Bhikaneer troops behaved shamefully, when sent by the Maharaja to attack the rebels. The Maharaja sent out four or five thousand troops, with four guns, but it is said the leader of these troops did nothing but follow the rebels from place to place, encamping always within three or four miles of them. A report has also reached our contemporary that in one place the cordiality between the Maharaja's troops and the rebels was so great that they peacefully drank water from the same well at the same time!

SHAHGUHR DISTRICT.—Colonels Apthorp and Beece's detachments have been all over the Shahguhr district, and entirely cleared it of rebels. It is, however, stated that a number have been driven down on the Dumoh district from the direction of Puna and Nagode, to the amount of about four thousand, with two guns, four or five hundred of the enemy being sepoys. They are in the hills not far from Jutta Sunker, and will doubtless be attacked as soon as the Dumoh position has been strengthened by a company of European infantry, the General probably trying to hem the rebels in from the Nagode side.

BENGAL.

COVENANTED AND UNCOVENANTED.

The Dacca News says:—"If the Moonsiff with his Rs. 100 monthly pay is 'not as honest as the district judge with his Rs. 30,000, or the puisne judge of the Supreme Court with his Rs. 60,000 a year, the fault is immediately attributed to the soil of India.'" Quite right; it is the soil of India that does it all, and it did just as much at the expense of European integrity until Europeans were put above temptation. When they were ill paid by the State, they paid themselves well—just as the Moonsiff will now as respects his own countrymen whenever he can. Leaguers, we suppose, will deny this; but it must not be taken to be in a spirit of mendacity, for very few of them, if any, know anything more of the country than they may happen to remember since they honoured it with their first footfall. Macaulay (let us sink the Lord, for he was no Lord when he spoke it in Parliament) tells a very characteristic story of Lord Clive's time:—"There was a tradition in Calcutta, where the story was very circumstantially told and generally believed, that a man came out with a strong letter of recommendation from one of the ministers to Lord Clive; and when Lord Clive saw that he was not only unfit for, but would positively do harm in any office, his lordship said, in a way peculiar to him, 'Well, chap, how much do you want?' Not being accustomed to be spoken to so plainly, the man replied, that he only hoped for some situation in which his services might be useful. 'That is no answer,' chap," said Lord Clive. 'How much do you want? Will £10,000 do?' The person replied, that he should be delighted if, by laborious service, he could obtain that competence. Lord Clive then wrote out an order for the man, and told the applicant to leave India by the ship he came in, and, once in England, to remain there." Macaulay went on to say—"I think the story is very probable, and I also think that the people of India ought to be grateful for the course Lord Clive pursued; for though he pillaged the people of Bengal to give this man a large sum, yet the man himself, if he had received an appointment, would not only have pillaged but misgoverned the people." This anecdote supplies two morals: the one that officials must not be expected to be honest on bad pay, and the other—most pertinent to the present time—that home influence in the distribution of Indian patronage would be a curse to the country. The story was introduced by the following:—"Looking over, only yesterday, for another object, a file of newspapers of 1771, I was struck by a paragraph stating that Mr. So-and-So, who went out with the Governor General only three years ago, had just landed with £40,000. These were the sort of men who took no office, but simply got the Governor General to pay a species of ransom, laying upon him a sort of tax—what the Mah-rattas call choret, and the Scotch black mail; that is, the sum paid to a thief, in consideration that he went away without doing harm." Times have much improved since then, yet it will always be prudent to remember certain cases of much more modern date, when disposed to be severe on the misconduct of ill-paid natives. Mr. Macaulay, perhaps one of the most thoroughly liberal men in England, politically speaking, was an earnest advocate for a close civil service. It may not be uninteresting if we republish a passage from the same speech from which we have just quoted.

Some gentlemen, for whose ability I have great respect, though I cannot agree with them, think the best mode of improving the Government of India is by giving the public appointments to the Governor General, and letting him choose his instruments for the administration. There will be no want of ability, they say, if you only give him their freedom to choose those who serve under him. There is something plausible in the proposition that you should allow him to choose able men wherever he finds them. But my firm opinion is, that the day on which the civil service of India ceases to be a close service will be the beginning of an age of jobbing the most monstrous, the most extensive, and the most perilous that ever existed. Every Governor General would, in such case, carry out with him, or would soon be followed by, a crowd of relatives, nephews, first and second cousins, friends, and political hangers-on; while every steamer arriving from the Red Sea would carry to India adventurers bearing with them letters from some powerful man in England, all praying for employment. Then upon these persons so recommended the Governor General would have it in his power to distribute residencies, seats in the Council Board, and places of from £4,000 to £6,000 a year upon men without the least acquaintance with the character or habits of the natives, and with only sufficient knowledge of the language to be able to call for a bottle of pale ale, or desire their attendants to pull the punkah harder. These men would be sent to exercise authority in different districts. One might be sent to a great station as ruler; and Mysore, not inferior to Scotland in extent and population, might be made subject to his absolute power.

No doubt; and those who were the bitterest enemies of the Company would have gladly faced all this risk, rather than that body should not have been deposed. Macaulay does not appear at this time to have seen that it was possible to have a close service, that is, a service into which needy adventurers could not be thrust, without perpetuating the exclusive patronage of the court. The competitive system has kept the service close while throwing it open: patronage at home can now do nothing, and patronage in India can do nothing except as it is exercised on worthy men, if not the worthiest; the service is open to all the talents, and it is closed to the mere nominees of influential men; this being so, it will gradually become more open without danger to its integrity, and while incapables can never be intruded, men of ability and vigour, who have proved themselves in the uncovenanted branch, cannot long be denied offices which claim them in the interests of the State. But such men must not be too sanguine; many now starving must starve on and accept a comparative pittance and subordinate place, while men, probably in no way their superiors, are growing rich and great in advancement; the entire transformation cannot be wrought at once; but having achieved the conquest of the principle, place for merit, it cannot stop at London appointments, but must eventually be extended throughout the length and breadth of the Empire.—Indian Field.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

The Indian Artillery is not to be increased. The measure, after a long delay, had been recommended as earnestly as wisely by Lord Canning. It was received with favour by the Indian Council. It was not resisted by the Secretary of State. So general, in fact, was the assent, that the increase was regarded as an accomplished fact, and was announced at home with demi-official authority. The Overland Mail, sure, for well-known reasons, to be thoroughly informed on such a point, now states that the project has been folded up. Lord Stanley has yielded to an irresistible pressure, and the increase is to be made in the Royal Artillery. Large reinforcements of this arm will be immediately despatched to India, and an application is to be made to Parliament for a permanent augmentation. A 15th and 16th battalion, it is said, will be added to the regiment, and each four battalions will be organised as a separate division, which will occupy a separate station with its own complete regimental staff. One of these stations it seems certain will be India, and the Commander in Chief would scarcely sanction a change of organisation to meet a demand he did not consider permanent. For the future, then, India is to be occupied by the royal artillery.

The incident may serve to convince our readers of the strength of the Horse Guards when exerted not against Parliament, but against a single department. It is almost certain that the change of plan has been carried in direct opposition to Lord Stanley, and his defeat on such a point is ominous of the fate of the larger question, the constitution of the European army in India. That question, of course, can be settled only in Parliament, but the decision of Parliament is by no means so certain as some writers would have us believe. Not to mention the members, some seventy in number, who are themselves officers, there are few members and fewer peers who have not sons, or cousins, or nephews bearing the Queen's Commission. The nation at large is careless, or if it has an opinion it is one favourable to the uniformity of military arrangements. The radicals who might oppose are put on such questions out of court by their peace theories, and a large though quiet minority with a European struggle inevitable will not be displeased to see an army of reserve maintained out of the sight, and away from the taxes of Great Britain. A determined exertion of the influence of the Crown may, under such circumstances, turn the scale, and the first contest has been already won.

The matter, as we have before observed, is one rather of the services than of politics. The Royal artillery will hold India as well as the Indian artillery. Whatever differences of discipline, or of materiel, or of professional education may exist must be readily remediable. Both regiments, while equally manned by Europeans, must be equally superior to any conceivable force of native Indian artillery. But neither the country nor the services can bear two regiments equal in duties, in organisation, in pay, and in renown, but only one of which is favoured by its rulers. As matters stand, the Indian artillery is told that it shall never advance, that no matter what its services or the public need, it is to remain stationary, while all augmentations are bestowed on the sister and rival service. This cannot last. Either the unfairness must be remedied, or the Indian artillery must be taken over to share in its new form the favour now refused. To maintain two services, one always depressed, the other always rewarded, is simply to perpetuate military anarchy. A depressed service is an inefficient service, and the safety of India depends on the efficiency of its artillery. For the present there is nothing for it but patience; but we warn our Indian readers once more that the struggle between the two opinions, between the Horse Guards and India, is more equal than they have been educated to believe.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE KING OF DELHI.—A report has been made to Government that the King of Delhi is in a state of destitution at Rangoon. Orders have accordingly been given that he shall receive a sufficient allowance for his suitable maintenance.

CENTRAL INDIA.—From Brigadier Somerset's camp near Boorah we hear that the rebel leaders had sent in two messengers to negotiate a surrender, and that, with General Michel's concurrence, terms had been offered to them, and four days had been granted in which to complete the act of surrender; these four days would expire on 27th February. On that day other gatherings of rebels near Julra Puttan, in the Kotah territory, were reported, but under other leaders, and apparently endeavouring to effect their escape in the direction of Seronge, in Ameer Khan's country.

BOHILCUND.—Letters received from Rohilcund mention that the rebel bands still infest that neighbourhood, and Lieut. de Kantzow has been directed to guard the district with his force.

THE LUCKNOW GARRISON.—The following is a disposition list of H. M.'s troops to be cantoned in Lucknow for the year 1859:—Disposition List: H. M.'s 23rd Welch Fusiliers; H. M.'s 88th Connaught Rangers; H. M.'s 37th Foot (now lying at the Moosabagh); H. M.'s 90th Light Infantry. European Cavalry: H. M.'s 2nd Dragoon Guards; H. M.'s 4th Light Dragoons; 2 troops of Horse Artillery; 3 companies of foot Sappers and Miners; 4th company of Royal Sappers; 2nd ditto of Delhi Pioneers.

RAO SAHIB AND FEROZE SHAH.—A letter from Goonah, dated 28th February, informs us (Bombay Gazette) that on the 25th, Rao Sahib and Feroze Shah, with 700 followers, all mounted, were reported to be at Jahnah Puttan, marching in a N. W. direction, and from Naharghur, south of Neemuch; while, on the other hand, the startling news had reached Goonah, that the Rao had sent in to General Michel an offer of his willingness to surrender, and that the General had actually left Neemuch, in company with Captain Shakespear, of Gwalior, in his political capacity, if possible to arrange terms with the rebel leaders. It is much to be hoped that Capt. Shakespear will succeed in arranging matters; for then the many hard-worked brigades—Smith's, Parke's, Honner's, Somerset's, and the Mhow field force—which have been in the field so long, could be spared to be sent to quarters before the hot season, now so close at hand, sets in in earnest; thus saving, no doubt, many valuable Europeans to the State who have already so cheerfully endured unprecedented hardships and privations. General Napier was at Naharghur, north of Chuppra, and in the direct course the rebels were likely to take, as it was supposed they were making for the Pardone jungles; while one hundred men of the 95th, under Capt. G. V. Brooke, had left Goonah on the 20th, direct for Jhalra Puttan, to join the regiment, and would, most likely, meet the rebel force on their way. Major Chetwode's force of H. M.'s 8th hussars, and 200 of the 95th, have gone a road-making, to open the jungle between Goonah and Pardone, and Shahabad and Naharghur. The 64th were expected to arrive at Goonah on the 1st, and halt there on the 2nd; the 86th "Royal County Down," having passed through about ten days before, are en route for Poonah. The skeleton of Smith's brigade would arrive at Chuppra on the 3rd, having left Kotah on the 25th of February, and Colonel Becher's regiment of Beatson's horse would be at Sonail, south of Jhalra Puttan, on the 28th of February, or 1st of March.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—We understand the members of the Uncovenanted Service seriously contemplate making a representation to Lord Stanley, in reference to their position and prospects. Doubtless the memorial will meet with attention, if properly drawn up; and as the late Court of Directors even acknowledged, though somewhat reluctantly, the value of the Uncovenanted Service, we are disposed to augur much good from this movement. If the uncovenanted do but evince a little more energy than they have hitherto done, with regard to the grievances they complain of, in time the invidious distinctions now existing between the Covenanted and Uncovenanted must be swept away. But there must be a great deal of "external pressure" to effect this, and we fear that there must be a large infusion of new blood fresh from our own little seagirt-isle, before the apathy and listlessness which are the besetting sins of the body can be got rid of. No one helps those who will not help themselves. If anything is to be done, it should be done at once. Talking will not mend matters.—Englishman, March 1.

GENERAL VAN CORTLANDT, after a long and honourable service of thirteen or fourteen years—a service marked by gallantry in the field and zeal in his civil capacity—proposes to retire so soon as the dispersion of the rebels, who have lately been in the neighbourhood of his district, shall have been effected.

CAMP KIRWEE, March 1, 1859.—You will be sorry to hear that Mr. Evans, chief engineer, and Mr. Linnell, district engineer of the railway department, marking out the Allahabad and Jubbulpore line, were murdered on the 26th inst. at Eentowa, in the Banda district, about twenty-four miles south of Kirwee, by a band of rebels under Rummust Sing, a Rewa Sirdar. Rummust Sing was down in the Jubbulpore district. Driven out of that, he joined Fuzund Ally in the Adjgurh district, and apprehensive of an attack from Maj. Gen. Whitlock at Nagode, they made a flank movement on the General, marched rapidly to the north as far as Bichone, and then turned eastwards, and got into the jungles to the south of the Banda district. There, hearing of the railway encampment at Eentowa, the thirst for plunder induced them to attack it. The movements of the rebels were too rapid to allow of the Banda authorities sending information to the railway people at Eentowa, which is seventy miles from Banda, but the zemindars of Eentowa warned them some four hours before the rebels arrived. Mr. Evans unfortunately did not believe them, and the rebels were soon on them. Messrs Evans, Linnell, and Campbell mounted and rode off. They were pursued, and Mr. Linnell falling off his horse, Mr. Evans went to his assistance. They were surrounded, and Mr. Evans was killed then and there, and Mr. Linnell was taken prisoner and murdered at the next village by order of Rummust Sing. Mr. Campbell arrived in safety at Manikpoor, and has gone into Allahabad. Major Babington, with one company H. M.'s 97th, two companies 17th M. N. I., and one squadron Madras cavalry, arrived to-day at Kirwee, and is going after the rebels, who are still in the Tirolan Pergunnah. By a later account we learn that Messrs. Kelsey, Murton, Strong, and Heywood, who were with the other engineers, effected their escape to Banda.—Delhi Gazette.

LORD CLYDE ON DRESS.—The following general order by the Right Hon. the Commander in Chief upon the subject of uniforms, interests all our military readers:—It has been brought to the notice of the Commander in Chief that, owing to the long protracted field service in which the army has been engaged during the last two years, a great laxity has come to be a habit amongst the officers of the army as regards dress, uniform, &c. His Excellency knows that this could not be helped in many cases, and he does not attribute blame; but the time has arrived for reasserting the regulations, now that all difficulty has subsided with respect to replacing uniform. Officers in command of divisions, brigades, and regiments, will therefore be good enough to insist on officers appearing dressed in uniform in places of public resort, according to the orders applicable to the season; the sword being worn on all occasions with uniform. This rule is not to interfere with the dress of officers when they may be engaged in sport, or during their morning rides when off duty. The Commander in Chief takes this opportunity also of enforcing on commanding officers the necessity of strict attention to these considerations, as regards all ranks of their regiments. Much of the discipline of an army depends on the manner in which orders are carried out on matters affecting the appearance and decorum of officers and soldiers.

MAJOR HASSELL, who raised the Muneyore regiment in Assam, has been removed from the command of the corps by Lord Clyde, for not obeying with promptitude some orders that were forwarded to him. The regiment has been now placed under the control of the civil power.

A BI-WEEKLY NEWSPAPER is about to be started at Lucknow with the title of the Lucknow Herald. There is also a rumour that a new paper is to be established at Delhi.

THE NANA.—According to the latest intelligence received at Gorruckpore, Nana is encamped at the foot of the hills with 3000 troops at the outside. It is reported that he has now no power, but goes about from place to place disguised, and is known to very few of the rebels. He now fears treachery.

NEPAUL.—The following is from Brigadier Horsford's column, Nepaul, dated 11th February, 1859:—"The brigade moved from Sundhara Ghaut on the 9th, where we had lain for some time, totally inactive, and is now encamped fourteen miles across the Raptée, on the Nepaul side. On the 10th we completely routed the Nana and Begum from the strong position which their forces in conjunction held in a valley, taking eleven guns and a mortar, without the slightest opposition having been offered; they evidently had not the slightest intimation of our proximity to them, our sudden appearance among them consequently had a very nice effect. Baneé Madhoo is said to be prowling about with a small force, acting independent to the two culprits mentioned. A very large number of prisoners have been taken within the last week or so, and many are giving themselves up.

RAWUL PINDEE.—The subadar major of the 58th (a disarmed corps) received one night by dak a letter, purporting to be from the native officers of the 18th irregular cavalry, urging him to get his regiment to rise, and promising the aid of the 18th and also of the 2nd irregular cavalry, which corps was passing through. The letter was at once given up. The 18th was paraded, and a reward of Rs. 1,000 was offered by the native officers of that corps for the conviction of the writer. Within two hours a trooper of the 18th shot himself. On searching his house a fac simile of the letter was found, also the seal used, and other letters written to various people with a view to get their regiments to rise.

THE OUDE COMMISSION.—Mr. S. N. Martin, deputy commissioner, Lucknow, goes on furlough, and Mr. P. Carnegie, from Sultanpore, succeeds him. Lieut. J. Perkins, assistant commissioner, Lucknow, has gone as the officiating deputy commissioner, in lieu of Mr. Carnegie; Mr. H. E. Perkins succeeds Lieut. Perkins; Mr. C. R. Crommelin goes to Roy Bareilly instead of Mr. Perkins; Mr. P. Walter, ex-assistant from Roy Bareilly, is transferred to Pertabghur; and Mr. W. F. St. C. Williams, ex-assistant from Lucknow, to Seetapore, so that our Oude Commission will now stand nearly as follows: Mr. C. J. Wingfield, officiating chief commissioner, and Mr. G. Campbell, judicial commissioner. Commissioners: Lieut. col. Abbott, Lucknow division; Major Barrow, C.B., Khyrabad; Mr. St. George Tucker, Fyzabad, and Mr. W. A. Forbes, officiating, Baraitech. Deputy commissioners: Mr. P. Carnegie, Lucknow; Mr. G. H. Lawrence, Oonam; Capt. A. P. Orr, Roy Bareilly; Lieut. E. Chamier, officiating, Duriabad; Capt. J. W. Carnegie, Mullaou; Mr. Balmain, Mahomdee; Lieut. E. Thompson, officiating, Seetapore; Mr. E. O. Bradford, Fyzabad; Lieut. J. Perkins, Sooltanpore; Mr. Stuart Hogg, Pertabghur; Capt. Steel, Baraitech; and Capt. Ross, Gondah. — Bengal Hurkaru, March 1.

OOJEIN, Feb. 28.—"After three months' wandering after Tania and Rao Sahib I have arrived here. I am glad to write you the following happy news, which I have learned from the Nawab of Jowra, who is with our force:—Rao Sahib, Tania, and Feroze Shah are at Ren Ghat, about fifty miles from this, and have sent in several messages to say that they wish to surrender themselves under the terms of the amnesty. Colonel Somerset and Captain Showers are very close to them. The Nawab has sent his right-hand man with a letter to Feroze Shah, saying that all should give themselves up, and that he, the Nawab, will be responsible for them after they do so." From another letter we learn that Colonel Somerset had ridden down some 200 cavalry, and compelled them to surrender. His whole line of march was traced out for him by these miserable rebels lying exhausted on the wayside. The colonel's force was in admirable order—men and horses—out of upwards of 600 Europeans there was not a dozen sick. The career of these marauders seems now to be nearer a close than it was at any time within the last nine months. We may soon expect the troops to be told off to their different stations. — Bombay Gazette.

FORGERY.—We learn that the Agra and United Service Bank has been defrauded to the amount of about 19,000 Rs., by having paid a cheque forged in the names of Messrs. Maneekjee Nusserwanjee and Kessow Jadowjee, who are trustees of the fund of the late firm of Kheemchund Moteechund, which is deposited in this bank. The perpetrator of this audacious crime has not as yet been discovered.

ARTILLERY MOVEMENTS.—On the 28th Feb. orders were received at Agra for the 2nd Company 5th Battalion Artillery and No. 21 Light Field Battery to march to Gwalior to take the place of four guns Bombay Light Field Battery, which are being withdrawn towards their Presidency, the battery to march from this on arrival of the 2nd Company 6th Battalion Bengal Artillery, with Light Field Battery now en route from Mhow; orders have arrived to send the recruits for the 2nd Company 6th Battalion forthwith to Agra to await the arrival of the battery.

DELHI.—It has again been proposed to pull down the fortifications and the palace of Delhi, and to erect barracks on the site of the latter. This was previously objected to, on account of the expense. Perhaps the hope of hidden treasure may have outweighed the certain cost of demolition.

RAJAH SHERE SING.—Government has ordered payment of the debts of the late Rajah Shere Sing, to the extent of Rs. 4,000.

THE NANA'S SISTER.—It is reported that one of the daughters of the late Bajee Rao, who is commonly called the sister of the Nana, has been caught, and declares that she has been friendly to this Government.

HORSES FOR INDIA.—The Indian Field, of the 26th of February, makes the following suggestions on the importation of horses from Australia:—"During the last eighteen months there have been a number of shipments of horses from Sydney and Melbourne to Calcutta, and in many cases these have been attended with considerable loss. Horses undoubtedly are a precarious freight, yet we cannot but think that with proper care and attention, and a judicious selection of superintendents to take charge of them, this loss might be much diminished. In proof of this we hear from Madras that a ship lately arrived there with horses for the artillery from Sydney. She sailed from the Sydney Heads on the 17th November, having on board one hundred and ten horses under the superintendence of Mr. King, late an officer in the 9th Lancers. She encountered much bad and stormy weather off the south-coast of Australia, with strong head winds; however, she arrived in Madras Roads with a loss of only five horses; three of these were killed during a gale of wind, in consequence of the fittings being defective; two horses only died from disease. Many of the horses were in better condition when they landed than when they were put on board; all who saw them on landing were struck with their appearance. These horses averaged £25 in Sydney. Their passage was £15 a head, and about £12 for superintendent's fee, grooms, forage, medicine, fittings, &c., making a total cost of Rs. 520 when landed in India, so that according to this calculation the Government can import from Australia cheaper and better horses than they can breed at the studs. The risk is small, where gentlemen who understand the business are employed in shipping and bringing the horses, the greater portion of the loss generally arising from carelessness or ignorance. With proper management, the loss ought not to be more than six per cent. Ships should not leave Sydney or Melbourne before the middle of November or later than the middle of January; the passage through Torres Straits is decidedly objectionable. This is a subject which demands the attention of the remount agents, and also of the private dealers. Some ships have lost half their cargo, and many a third, and the majority of those that arrive look more like worn-out skeletons from a knacker's yard than fresh horses brought up for sale. There is no city in the world where there is such a great demand and small supply of good moderate-priced horses as in Calcutta."

NEEMUCH, Feb. 22.—General Michel and his quartermaster general arrived here yesterday; we are now in treaty with the rebels. After the fight near Soojet they came towards us, through the Chutter Bhooj Pass, Kankrowli tank, Heeta, and Burra Sadri; at this place they were checked by Captain Heycock, made for Jeerun, where they arrived last Saturday, the 19th, and sent in to us for terms. Brigadier Somerset, who, unknown to us, was in full pursuit, arrived at Jeerun on Sunday, and found his hands tied. At present the rebels have three days' grace, after which if they do not come to terms they are to have four hours' notice, and then we are to be after them again. Tania Topee is not with this party; he is supposed to have returned to Hindustan from Seekhur disguised. The Rao, the late Sudder Ameen of Allyghur, the Nawab of Jourah's brother, the Nawab of Mallaghur, and the Bukshée of Neimbhara, are in the camp. — Delhi Gazette.

OUDE. — BANKS OF THE RAPTEE, Feb. 23.—We have only just returned from Nepaul; the expedition was very successful; we captured sixteen guns, without any casualties at all on our side; this was the more to be wondered at, as the rebels had posted themselves in a strong position in jungle on the banks of the river Raptée, and fired upwards of twenty rounds of canister and round shot at our men, as they advanced over rocky and stony ground; several of the rebels were killed, and hakeries, and various odds and ends were taken. We remained in Nepaul a week, and on our return found the 1st Bengal fusiliers encamped on our old ground. The 7th Queen's own hussars left us this morning, en route to Umballa; the parting between that gallant regiment and the 2nd battalion rifle brigade was quite touching, the band playing them out of camp for a mile, the men following and bidding farewell to their old friends. When they reached the nullah they formed up and cheered as only Englishmen can; this was responded to by the 7th in the most enthusiastic manner, and so they parted, never having been separated a day since March, 1858, and having kept up the friendship which has always existed between these two regiments. We deeply regretted parting with the gallant 7th, but, at the same time, are delighted, for their sake, that the long-expected order has arrived, that would transport them to so good a station as Umballa; we wish them a hearty farewell, and a pleasant march to the best station in India, and only have to add, that they deserve being sent there. Our work, as far as fighting is concerned, appears to be at an end, and we are all looking forward to the pleasant prospect of good stations, and something better than canvas for covering during the approaching hot weather. — Delhi Gazette, March 1.

NEGLECT OF DUTY.—We (Mofussilite) regret to hear that a young man, who, for his services at Lucknow during the siege, had an adjutancy of mounted police conferred upon him, has arrived in Agra under a guard in order to be tried by court-martial. He had charge of the Nawab of Furruckabad from Cawnpore to Futteyghur, and while on the road an attempt at bribery was made through the adjutant's servant, who reported the matter to his master. The adjutant refused to listen to the offer, and eventually delivered his prisoner in safety. The charge upon which he is to be tried is for not having reported officially to his superiors the attempted bribery, which only became known in private conversation long after the event.

CASHMERE.—Jowallah Shah, the prime minister of Maha Rajah Rungbeer Sing of Cashmere, had lately an interview with the lieutenant governor of the Punjab on the subject of the late disturbance at Cashmere. Rajah Jawurhir Sing also waited upon his honor, who advised Jowallah Shah to recommend his royal master to send the families of Rajah Jawurhir Sing to an estate called the Doaba, and to make it over to them for their support and maintenance, which is likely to cut off all communications with the belligerent young rajah. The prime minister, it is said, has consented to this proposal.

DINAPORE.—The following movements have taken place in the Dinapore division. The left wing of the 29th has gone to Sasseram. The right wing and head-quarters are at Palamow with Lieut. col. Turner's force. The regiment of Loodians has moved to Dehree, from Benares, and after numerous orders and counter orders, it is expected the head-quarters of the 2nd battalion of the 60th rifles will move from Arrah to Benares. The 77th are still under canvas at Sasseram, waiting for orders.

FUTTEGHUR, March 3.—The trial of the rebel Nawab of Furruckabad, which began on the 14th of February, still continues. The case for the prosecution closed on the 24th, and time for the defence to be prepared was granted to Monday, the 28th. On that day the prisoner's counsel appeared with several statements relative to the informal wording of the charges against the prisoner, and submitted that the prisoner's allegiance to the Government and the names of the murdered parties, or their being British subjects, were not established by the prosecutor, who had no evidence on the main point, as the amnesty excluded from the pale of mercy persons convicted of such crimes; and after going on to analyse the depositions of the prosecutor's witnesses, and some of the documentary evidence, read to the court a narrative he had taken under prisoner's dictation, which not being easily deciphered was returned, in order that a fair copy of the same be submitted; and, as it was of some length, the court, to give time, proposed to assemble on Tuesday at noon. Mr. W. H. Robertson, the public prosecutor, has availed himself of the leave he obtained, and having shown the court his authority, Mr. Hammond, of the civil service, has taken up the case of the Nawab.

BABOO HEMCHUNDER DUTT KEZANCHEE, of the Treasury, has received a highly complimentary letter from the directors of the bank of Bengal, for his successful exertions in exposing and prosecuting a native officer of the bank, who systematically cashed stolen notes. The commercial community of Calcutta should, we think, offer a large reward for such information as will lead to the detection of the accomplices of the convicted Omlah. It is beyond belief that Brijonauth Bose could alone and unaided have perpetrated frauds of this nature. There are others in the business, which is a very profitable one, for the published account of the bank shows that stolen notes to the amount of Rs. 20,000 were recently cashed. Who took this money? Brijonauth Bose is a beggar, and he could not have swallowed the entire amount. The commissioner of police ought to make a stir, and discover the two or three gangs of receivers of stolen notes who are defrauding the community. It is useless transporting or hanging Brijonauth Bose or men like him, if those who are materially benefited by these frauds are not exposed and punished.—Englishman, Feb. 22.

THE MUNNEEPORE CHIEFS, who are now residing at Kishnaghur, lately petitioned Government that they be permitted to draw a higher rate of subsistence allowance than that granted to them. The petition was referred to Mr. Allan for report, and that officer stated that the allowance to the Munneepore chiefs was fixed by the superintendent of Cachar at about double the sum they have been in the habit of expending for their maintenance in Cachar, and that these allowances were considered sufficient for their decent support in any of the regulation districts of eastern Bengal. As, however, the prices of articles of consumption at Kishnaghur have risen very high, Mr. Allen was of opinion that the increase of allowance petitioned for may with propriety be granted as long as they reside at Kishnaghur. The Bengal Government, concurring with Mr. Allen, recommended it to the Supreme Government, and the Government of India sanctioned the increased subsistence for Chowrutton Sing and his fellow-countrymen during their residence at Kishnaghur.

H.M.'s 61st REGIMENT proceeds to England, via Kurrachee, immediately.

LUCKNOW, March 1, 1859.—Our good old Commander in Chief, Lord Clyde, leaves Lucknow to-day for the hills, where it is to be hoped he will soon recruit his health and strength. They say he has been suffering from an attack of bronchitis and other ailments, by which he was for a time utterly prostrated, but is now well enough to be able to travel. In consequence of his departure, the neighbourhood of "Dilaram," where he had his encampment, was a scene of animation. Elephants were seen proceeding with their ponderous loads, strings of camels pacing along with an undulating motion, horsemen careering in gallant style, and foot-soldiers moving on with a steady tramp. Our officiating chief commissioner proceeds to-day on a tour into the interior of the province, where his presence will be of much use; personal inspection is frequently far better than voluminous correspondence. It saves much time, and leads to an earlier decision on matters of importance. Mr. Wingfield is evidently a man of great energy, and his administration will, no doubt, tend to much good. He is accompanied on his tour by his military secretary, Captain Hutchinson, of the engineers, whose experience and opinion on subjects connected with the public works department will be of advantage in concocting local improvements. Mr. P. Carnegie has just taken charge of the deputy commissionership of Lucknow, and has thereby relieved Mr. S. N. Martin, who is going on furlough. Mr. Schilling, the principal of the Martinière College, has just returned to India, after a trip to England, whither he proceeded shortly after the relief of the Lucknow garrison. Mr. Schilling is expected daily at this place, if he is not here already. His arrival will be the signal for active operations in re-establishing the institution of which he is the head. He will not be here a day too soon, for some sort of stimulus has long been needed to set up the college, the want of which is much felt by parents. We have had strange and unusual weather for some time back. Clouds appear and disappear. It looks dull and gloomy for a day or so. It then clears up, and a bright sunshine succeeds. It is at times cold or chilly, and then becomes close and sultry. We are occasionally regaled with a sprinkling shower, just sufficient to settle the dust.—Delhi Gazette.

GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL MEASURES.—We may state, upon the authority of one of our principal merchants, that a letter has been addressed to the Chamber of Commerce by the leading shroffs and bankers of the bazaar headed by some of the wealthiest native families who are not in business, but are large holders of Government securities. The letter highly approved of the resolutions of the chamber, and its address to Government on the recent financial measures, at the same time entirely disapproving of the treasury notification since issued. They state that they have no confidence whatever in the measures of the present Government, and will have nothing to do with any loans which they may announce. We are also informed that a copy of this letter was forwarded by the last mail to Lord Stanley, and will, no doubt, have his serious attention.—Englishman, Feb. 28.

A BOLD EXPERIMENT.—It appears that the Punjab Government has introduced English as the language of law into all the courts of the province. It was first tried for three months as an experiment, and was confined to civil suits under Rs. 100 and above 1,000, and to petty criminal cases.

MILITARY PAY OFFICES.—The Hurkaru gives currency to a rumour that several of the military pay offices both in the Upper and Lower Provinces of Bengal are to be abolished, and that some officers, most probably uncovenanted ones, will be appointed at a salary of two or three hundred rupees at some of the military depots for the purpose of paying the troops.

YEOMANRY CORPS.—Donations and rewards have been granted to the yeomanry corps who fought with the rebel troops under Feroze Shah, and pensions ordered for the families of those who were killed.

MILITARY FURLOUGHS.—In order to provide additional means of passage to England for the military officers of Government, who may desire to avail themselves of furlough, the Governor General in Council has agreed to charter the steam-ship Hindostan to proceed from Calcutta to Suez on the 30th April, provided that by the 20th March, a sufficient number of applications from military officers be received, to defray a considerable proportion of the expenses of the trip. The passage-money will be to Suez, Rs. 750. From Suez the means of proceeding onward by the Mediterranean continental routes are always available.

MUSSOORIE, Feb. 11.—We have had but two falls of snow here. In January we had more sunny days than cloudy; this month we have had repeated indications of snow, but none has fallen. Last Monday we had a storm of thunder and lightning; the thunder was awfully loud, and the lightning struck Captain Chilcott's cottage, on the road leading to Rajpore, about 4 o'clock P.M. The cottage burned for several hours, and was entirely destroyed. Notwithstanding the number of houses here, people, encouraged by the large concourse of visitors during the last two seasons, are still building. A cheeta was caught in a trap here the other day and shot.

BERAR FIELD FORCE.—TUMSAH, 10th Feb.—Since my last we have been making long marches of thirty and twenty miles from Buswuntnugger to this place, Tumsah. Three miles from this is the strong fort of Digris, in which, until the other day, were 500 Arabs under a chieftain of the name of Shaik Ahmed, from the city of Hyderabad. These Arabs had seized upon a Koonbee and put him in a palanquin, and gave out that he was the grandson of the famous Nosajee Naik, who, in former years, gave a good deal of trouble, and was the cause of the great fight at Nowar some thirty-five years ago in this part of the country, when the Arabs received severe punishment from the Nizam's army. They (the Arabs) had been here fifteen days, and a Mogal army of some 700 strong with two guns, under the Naibs of Omerkheir and Niomull had been attempting to fight them, but with no success. We left Buswuntnugger on the morning of the 8th instant, after a march of thirty miles encamped at Hunah, and on the following morning came on here, to learn that the rebels had fled from Digris the same day that we left Buswuntnugger. They took away with them a great deal of plunder which they had discovered in the place. Had they stood, not a man would have escaped us; from the nature of the surrounding ground and the position of the Gurrie our horse artillery and cavalry would have cut them up to a man. The shelling of the howitzers and 5½-inch mortars would in a very short time have rendered the place too hot to be tenable. This would have been a glorious finale to our little campaign. The rebels have now retired into the impenetrable jungles of Nirmull, having been traced there for thirty miles by a jemadar of the 3rd cavalry, H. C. Wilayat Ali Beg, who distinguished himself in the campaign in Central India last year, and was particularly noticed by Sir Hugh Rose. The reason for these proceedings on the part of these rebels is said to be, that in former years Nosajee took refuge with the father of the Potal of Digris, and entrusted three lacs of treasure to his keeping, and sometime after came to receive the money back, but the Potal denied ever having received it, and quietly turned Nosajee out of Digris. Now they are taking their revenge on his descendants. The amount of loot is said to be more than two lacs, and the place from which it was dug is fully capable of containing three times that amount. The tortures that the Arabs put some old women, relations of the Potal, to, to make them show where the treasure was concealed, is so atrocious that they surpass description. The loot now taken will suffice to keep them quiet during the hot weather, and in the jungles we could not exist, as no supplies can be procured, although the rebels manage to get what they require from the Brinjarees, who readily give it to them though we might whistle for it. Sir Hugh Rose is now, I learn, on his way to take the field against the rebels in this part of the country. I am afraid the gallant general will only have a useless march, as there is not a single rebel in these parts. We are now employed in destroying the Fort of Digris, and then I think the Berar Field Force will be broken up.—Madras Spectator, Feb. 21.

HINGOLEE, Feb. 28.—There is nothing new or of importance to communicate from these parts. The Arabs and Rohillas have apparently dispersed in small bodies, and rumour says they have gone in the direction of Hyderabad; while other reports state that they have fled towards Neernull. There appears to be a cordon of detachments north of the Godavery, from Omerkair to Mrizy Pybom; but whether true or false is not known.

THE FUSILIERS.—The proposal to present the Madras Fusiliers with a silver standard has been objected to on military grounds.

MALWA.—The Spectator has been informed that Malwa, a large town in the Nizam's country, was plundered on the 2nd March, and 40,000 rupees in hard cash carried away. Malwa is only eighteen miles distant from the assigned districts.

A TRUE ESTIMATE.—A writer who has published in the Vizagapatam Chronicle a very readable account of the proceedings of the Central India field force, says that just after the mutiny at Mhow even Holkar was in doubt. Like a true Indian he consulted his astrologer, and received the following reply, "If all the Europeans save one are slain, that one will remain to fight and reconquer."

ANTI-MISSIONARY MEETING.—The Madras Times mentions a rumour current for some days in Madras that certain of the leading Hindoos and Mahomedans at the Presidency have arranged the preliminaries for a monster anti-missionary meeting. Their Brahmins and Moulvies are to be summoned in large numbers from the Mofussil to lend the movement the sanction of their authority, and aid it with their counsel and rhetoric. The conduct of Mr. Levinge in reference to the recent tragedy at Palamcottah is the ostensible grievance and the expulsion of missionaries from India the real object of the promoters of the intended agitation. For the redress of their supposed wrongs and the attainment of their remedy a memorial is to be presented to the Secretary of State for India.

OFFICIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Government of India has appointed Mr. J. L. Lushington, 1st assistant accountant general at Madras, to be officiating civil auditor at Madras, and Mr. H. A. Mangles, 2nd assistant accountant general to the Government of India, to be 1st officiating assistant accountant general, Madras. These changes have been ordered in consequence of Mr. Lushington, civil auditor, having proceeded on duty to Calcutta.

MAJOR GENERAL LOGAN.—A salute of eleven guns was fired from the fort on Tuesday evening, March 1st, on the occasion of the embarkation for England of Major General A. S. Logan, of the Madras army, on board the steamer Candia.

POONA MISSION.—We (Bombay Guardian) have received the report of the Free Church Mission at Poona for 1858. We learn from it that there are four Marathi services on the Sabbath; and that the Rev. Mr. Mitchell frequently on other days addressed the people in the streets, at temples, schools, &c. It is now thirty-six years since Mr. Mitchell came to this country to preach the Gospel to the natives, and for this long term of years he has been enabled, by the good hand of his God upon him, to continue with scarcely any interruption at his post and at his work. The report mentions that one of the native assistants was assaulted, on one occasion, as he was preaching in the streets. The offending parties were summoned to appear in the sessions court, when the judge (the present Acting Chief Justice) summarily dismissed the case because Mr. Ramchunder, the party assaulted, would not swear to his statement by kissing the Bible. He desired to be sworn according to his conscience, by holding up his hand to heaven. The Judge undoubtedly erred. Ramchunder was not the only witness; but the Judge would examine none of them. We are happy to say that, in Bombay, native converts who have been similarly assaulted have had no difficulty in obtaining redress; and that now such instances are less common. The native church, connected with the Free Church Mission in Poona, contains thirty-six members, communicants. Four were baptised last year. Attached to the Report is an appeal for aid to build an edifice for the accommodation of the Institution, and for a preaching place. A friend in Scotland is ready to give Rs. 5,000 if Rs. 3,000 be raised in this country; thus the required sum would be provided. We trust that there will be no difficulty in the way of raising the needed sum.

HIS EXCELLENCY VISCOUNT TORRES NOVAIS, Governor General of Goa, arrived in Bombay on the 5th March, by the steamer Victoria. A salute of nineteen guns was fired from the receiving ship Achar, on his disembarking into the Governor's barge, which was towed by the steamer Snake to the Apollo Pier, and on his landing a similar number of guns was fired from the saluting battery. His Excellency was accompanied by two of his staff, the Governor's aide-de-camp, and the town major, and an Indian navy officer, and was received by a guard of honour, the band of the 1st Grenadier regiment N.I. playing the national anthem. He proceeded in the Governor's state carriage to Government House, Parell, where he resided during his short stay here. His Excellency came to Bombay on his way to the Portuguese settlements of Diu and Demann, where he proceeds on a tour of inspection. His Excellency took his departure on the 8th on board H.M.'s steamer Victoria, I.N., for Demann. Lord Elphinstone accompanied him in the barge to the steamer.

THE REV. MR. CANDY, having received an appointment as Association Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, has assigned the pastorate of Trinity Chapel, Bombay.

HER MAJESTY'S 40TH REGIMENT.—The right wing and head-quarters of H.M.'s 40th regiment, under the command of Lieut. col. Vesey, embarked at Keammarree, on board of a river steamer and flat on Saturday, the 19th, for Mooltan. The left wing, under Lieut. col. Campbell, will remain in garrison until after the arrival of the 1st Bombay European regiment (Fusiliers), from Mooltan.

A KAFILA.—During the past week 203 camels, 8 horses, and 65 men, arrived from Cabul and Kandahar, with wool and merchandize.—Sind Kossid, March 1.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.—The 14th Regiment Native Infantry has been directed to hold itself in readiness to embark for Jooria Bunder en route to Ahmedabad. One hundred rounds of ammunition per man to accompany the regiment. The order for the march of H.M.'s 64th regiment's depot from Belgaum has been countermanded for the present. It is rumoured that two more European regiments will be stationed at Belgaum, in addition to those that are at present in the station.

BOOKS FOR SOLDIERS.—We are glad to learn that Lord Stanley has kindly consented to forward to India, free of charge, all cases of books and tracts for the British soldiers, which may be sent by the Soldiers' Friend and Army Scripture Readers' Society. Our readers are aware that Mr. McKinlay is an agent of the above society in this Presidency. He is with the 33rd, at Deesa.

SHIKARPORE, Jan. 21.—The collector of Shikarpore reports that on his tour through the districts he has been well satisfied with the exertions made last season in the extension of cultivation. The new lands brought under the plough in the Larkana and Shikarpore divisions exceed those of any previous seasons, and will considerably enhance the revenues of these districts. In the Kere or left bank districts, where the inundation was much less than usual, a great diminution in the cultivation is manifest, and the wheat-crop is comparatively small. The present season is favourable for all agricultural operations. The canal and bund works are being speedily executed throughout the Zillah.

ARRIVAL OF SIR JOHN LAWRENCE.—Sir John Lawrence, Bart., Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, arrived in Bombay on Wednesday evening, the 9th March, by H. M. steamer Feroze from Kurrachee. His excellency was accompanied by the Governor's aide-de-camp to the Apollo pier in a boat of the steamer Feroze, and was received by a guard of honour, the band of the 7th regiment N.I. playing the national anthem. He proceeded in the Governor's state carriage to Government House, Parell, where he will reside during his short stay here.

MR. HENRY PRENTICE was sworn in on the 10th of March to practise as an attorney, solicitor, and proctor of her Majesty's supreme Court at Bombay.

A SENSIBLE HINT.—The last Government Gazette contained a warning to officers in the public works department against indiscriminate correspondence with railway projectors, who, it seems, sometimes make capital out of the opinions of public officers. Lord Stanley, disapproving of the practice, desires that all officers may conform to this advice.

THE LATE REV. P. ANDERSON.—The following appropriate memorial of the late much respected chaplain of Colaba, the Rev. Philip Anderson, has been placed in the Colaba Church:—

PHILIP ANDERSON, M.A.,
CHAPLAIN OF COLABA
FOR SEVEN YEARS,
DEPARTED THIS LIFE 13TH DECEMBER, 1857,
IN THE 42ND YEAR OF HIS AGE.
IN LIFE HIS PEOPLE LOVED HIM, IN DEATH THEY BLESS HIS MEMORY, AND PRAY THAT THEY TOGETHER WITH HIM MAY ATTAIN THE RESURRECTION UNTO ETERNAL
ERECTED BY THE CONGREGATION.

PUBLIC WORKS IN SCINDE.—During the past ten days the collector and deputy collector of Shehwan have been encamped in the neighbourhood of the great Munchur Lake, for the purpose of making arrangements for digging the new drainage canal. The Munchur Lake is filled during the inundation by two back-water channels from the Indus, viz., the Western Narra and the Arul. This latter channel, when the inundation subsides, is reversed, and acts imperfectly as a drainage channel. On the borders of this lake (which in the inundation is thirty and forty miles in circumference) the finest wheat, barley, jumba, sursee, and other crops are grown, and the extent of cultivation is greatly dependent upon the rapid drainage of the lake after the inundation, for, as the water is drained off, so rich cultivable land is exposed. The Arul has been found to act imperfectly, and it has, therefore, been determined to cut a new drainage channel from a deep part of the Munchur near Boobuk, to the Arul near Sehwan, a distance of about fourteen miles, eight of which have to be excavated and cleared. To carry out this important work, the deputy collector, Captain Lionel Dunsterville, called upon all the Munchur Zemindars to supply workmen; and so excellent were his arrangements, that in five days one thousand six hundred and eleven men were collected, and are now working most willingly and systematically. It is quite a sight to see so large a body of men cutting out the canal in steps with every man in his allotted place. While the men for this work were assembling, Mr. A. F. Bellasis, in company with Captain Lionel Dunsterville and Captain Pirie, paid a visit to the hills near Teyoo, where ibex were said to be abundant. The result of two days' sport was, that Capt. Pirie killed a large panther, which had been committing great ravages among the goats and cattle of the hills. Mr. Bellasis shot three ibex and one deer, and Capt. Dunsterville two deer.—Scinde Kossid.

G. R. BALLINGALL, Esq., M.D., professor of surgery in the Grant Medical College, intends to leave for England in April or May next, on leave of absence, for six months, on urgent private affairs.

CIVIL AUDITOR'S OFFICE.—It is rumoured that on account of the heavy rent charged in the fort, the Civil Auditor's Office is to be removed to Mazagon, near the Sudder Foudjaree and Sudder Dewanee Adawlut.

COLLECTOR OF BOMBAY.—Mr. F. Hutchinson, collector of Bombay, has applied to Government for one year's leave of absence to proceed to Europe. Mr. Hutchinson's health, which, we are sorry to state, has been failing for the last few months, compels him to seek relief in a change of climate.

HYDRABAD IN SCINDE, Feb. 13.—The canal clearances progress satisfactorily. The Rubbe crops continue, for the most part, to be promising; but owing to the want of moisture felt in eastern localities, some fears of a scanty out-turn are apprehended. The extent of Rubbee cultivation is much in excess of any preceding year, owing to the late favourable inundation, and a few showers of rain would now be most seasonable. The indications of rain observed last week have all cleared off, and no rain is reported to have fallen; the clouds have disappeared, and appearances, at least at present, are not in favour of an early fall. The weather has been agreeable, but is sensibly becoming warmer. The health of the people is gradually improving. The collector, during the week, visited the eastern part of the Sukkurund Talooka, bordering on the Narra, and he was struck with the immense track of rich soil lying waste purely from want of water. The land hereabouts being of a dead level, with hardly any underwood or jungle which would require to be cleared, presents facilities for cultivation rarely met with in the Collectorate. Any outlay would, therefore, be amply repaid. A project for the irrigation of this locality by means of the water which now runs to waste in the Narra Dunds has been submitted for the consideration of the Superintendent of Canals. No cases of snake bite reported.

THE GERMAN LEGION.—We are informed that the German Legion, consisting of thirty-two officers, and 1,400 rank and file, are to be disbanded. The officers, if their services are not required in India, will receive a passage back to the Cape, to revert to their original condition, and the men will be permitted to enlist in any of the existing European regiments of the three Presidencies.

A NEW LEGAL PARTNER!—We learn that Mr. Henry Prentice, who was sworn in as a solicitor of the Supreme Court on Thursday, the 10th March, joins the firm of Messrs. L. and S. L. Acland, the senior member, Mr. Lawford Acland, being about to proceed to Europe.

LIBERALITY OF COWASJEE JEHANGIR READY-MONEY, Esq.—This public-spirited and wealthy gentleman has placed at the disposal of the Committee of the Gymnastic Academy, recently founded by a number of intelligent Parsees, the sum of Rs. 500, the interest of which is to be devoted to the advancement of that institution.

MAJOR W. L. MEREWETHER has been appointed Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Scinde.

TROOPS.—The ship Northumberland, with the reinforcements of H.M.'s various regiments, consisting of 10 officers and 300 men, under the command of Major Welman, of H.M.'s 86th regiment, arrived in Bombay on the 5th March from Cork, which port she left on the 21st October last:—Major H. Welman, H.M.'s 86th foot; Captain J. Williams, H.M.'s 28th foot; Cornet the Hon. F. Amhurst, 14th light dragoons; Cornet W. S. Browne, 14th light dragoons; Cornet T. #### Farewell Orders.

Id. Qrs., Lucknow, Feb. 25.—The following regiments being under orders to return to England, and the Madras fusiliers to their own presidency, the Commander in Chief bids them a hearty farewell:—

9th "Queen's Royal" Lancers.

14th Light Dragoons.

2nd Battalion Military Train.

The Naval Brigade H. M.'s ship Pearl.

10th Regiment of Foot.

84th "

86th "

1st Madras Fusiliers.

It has seldom happened that any regiments have been more distinguished than has been the case with all these corps during the years they have passed in India.

1. The 9th Lancers began their fine career with the Gwalior campaign, including the battle of "Punniar," after which they participated in the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns, with the battles of "Sobraon," "Chillianwallah," and "Goojerat." In 1857 and 1858 they were most prominent at the Siege of Delhi, having served and driven guns in addition to their other duties during that trying time; at the relief of Lucknow; the battle of Cawnpore; the siege of Lucknow; the campaign of Rohilkund; and the campaign of Oude, ending in the reduction of the province.

2. The 14th light dragoons bore a part in the Punjab campaign, including the battles of "Chillianwallah" and "Goojerat;" they were present in the Persian expedition under Sir James Outram, and have been incessantly and most admirably engaged in Central India till very lately, since the Bombay division first took the field in the autumn of 1857; including more particularly the siege of "Jhansi," the actions of the Betwa and Golowlie, and the relief of Gwalior. Their squadrons and troops have also been engaged in very many minor affairs, in which much honour has been won.

3. The 10th foot were greatly distinguished at the battle of "Sobraon," at the siege of "Mooltan," and the battle of "Goojerat." During 1857 they were employed at Benares and in Behar; and in 1858 they assisted at the siege of Lucknow—having since been frequently engaged in the Azingurh and Shahabad campaigns.

4. The 29th foot gained much honour in the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns, including the battles of "Ferozeshah," "Chillianwallah," and "Goojerat."

5. The 32nd light infantry, as is well known, formed the chief part of the illustrious garrison of Lucknow, under the late Sir Henry Lawrence and Sir John Inglis; their previous career in India having embraced the siege of Mooltan, the battle of "Goojerat," and the operations in the Peshawur Valley. Subsequent to the relief of the Lucknow garrison, the 32nd were at the battle of Cawnpore; and in the autumn of 1858 were engaged in the reduction of the province of Oude.

6. The 61st foot won great reputation for themselves at "Chillianwallah" by their extraordinary steadiness at a moment of very great peril. That reputation was well maintained afterwards at the battle of "Goojerat," and again at the siege of Delhi.

7. The 78th foot were in Persia, under Sir James Outram. Without landing at Bombay, they came round to Calcutta, and were among the first, under the late Sir Henry Havelock, to restore confidence in British arms after the outbreak of the mutiny. Present at the various actions under that lamented officer, and at the first entry into Lucknow for the reinforcement of the original garrison, they completed their service by the siege of Lucknow and the campaign of Rohilkund.

8. The 84th foot and the Madras fusiliers were both sent round from the presidency of Madras when the first note of danger was sounded in 1857. Like their comrades of the 78th, they participated in all the actions of that eventful period. They both took part in the siege of Lucknow; the Madras fusiliers pursuing a campaign in Oude during the subsequent summer, while the 84th foot performed the like arduous duty amid the swamps and jungles of Behar.

9. The 86th have been engaged in Central India under Sir Hugh Rose, having borne a most prominent part in all the principal actions commanded by that officer, viz.—the siege of "Jhansi," the battle of the "Betwa," the action of "Golowlie," the capture of "Calpee," and the relief of "Gwalior," together with numerous smaller affairs.

10. Such is a very slender sketch of the services performed by the above corps. The limits of a General Order render it impossible to do more than allude to the principal actions in which they have been engaged. But it will be a satisfaction to all these regiments to recollect hereafter how well they have deserved of their Queen and country; and that in the opinion of those best qualified to judge, they have well maintained the reputation which was committed to their charge by those who went before them.

11. Let the army well reflect on the meaning of a regimental reputation. In it is contained not only the reputation of every man at present in a corps, but also the reputation of those who lived in it in former days; while the future fortunes of a regiment may, to a great extent, be influenced by it.

12. Feeling this very strongly, the Commander in Chief considers he can pay no higher or heartier compliment to the regiments of which he is now taking leave, than to assure them, in all sincerity, that they have on all occasions during their Indian career proved themselves worthy of the reputation won in former days by men wearing the same numbers and badges as themselves.

13. It remains for the Commander in Chief to notice with feelings of admiration the exploits of the military train, and of the naval brigade of the Pearl.

14. The former was converted into a cavalry corps in the midst of war, and learnt to act as cavalry soldiers before the enemy. Their duty has always been done well, and included the relief of Lucknow, various affairs under Sir James Outram, siege of Lucknow, and the campaigns in "Azimghur" and "Shahabad." The battalion of the military train now returning to England will be warmly welcomed by the new corps, of which it may be said to have begun the active career before an enemy.

15. The Naval brigade of the Pearl, which for a long time formed the principal European force in the Goruckpore district, has been engaged in numerous actions, in all of which the steady gallantry of the officers and men under Captain Sotheby, C.B., rendered a great and enduring service to the State. They have shown themselves in every respect to be worthy comrades of the famous crew of the Shannon, which won such renown before Lucknow, under the late gallant and lamented Sir William Peel.

By order of the right honourable the Commander in Chief,
W. MAYHEW, lieut. colonel,
Adjutant general of the Army.

BREVET.

Capt. T. Rattray, 64th Bengal N.I., to be maj. in the army, April 1.

BAREILLY, Feb. 21.—Sobba Ram, of Bareilly, is to be transported for life. A rebel chief named Kali Khan, or some similar name, was hanged on Saturday morning. He was convicted of the murder of some officers at the first outbreak of the rebellion. On Friday the band of the 78th highlanders met the wing of the 42nd highlanders, and played them through the city, and on Sunday morning the 78th marched en route to Agra. The missionaries have received permission to occupy Cashmere House. They have now a regular line established between Moradabad and Lucknow, by way to Bareilly, Shahjehanpore and Seetapore.—New Times.

NUWAB OF FURRUKABAD.—We (Englishman) learn from Fattygurh, that the trial of the Nuwab of Furrukabad has commenced, and it is supposed that it will last some time. The Nuwab is arraigned for taking an active part in the rebellion, and is charged with being an accessory to the murder of Europeans. He is defended by Mr. Carruther, the attorney, who hopes to make more in these diggings than in the gold fields at Bithoor. We hope he will remember the treatment of Mr. Phillips and some other advocates, and not pledge himself too far in the cause or the defence of his client. We do not wish to see any man go without his defendant, but we do not envy the Englishman who has to defend the Nuwab of Furrukabad.

A JAPANESE GARDEN.—The garden, though very circumscribed in area, and so situated as to bound the horizon on every side, contained within its limits two ponds, stocked with fish, and ornamented with the lotus in full flower, a bridge, the lawn, shrubbery, kitchen, and flower-garden, and a mountain side, up which a tortuous path led to two or three fine cedars on the summit, from whence an enterprising traveller might contemplate the roofs of two adjoining houses, and the cupola of a Buddhist temple—each, to use a nautical metaphor, about a biscuit's throw distant. No one but a Japanese gardener could have crammed all these objects together into so small a space, and still preserved anything like order and good taste, on neither of which heads could much complaint be made. Many of the trees were, of course, dwarfed, but the skill exhibited in having everything in just proportion, so as to make size and colour assist in the deception practised upon the eye, was, it appeared to us, most remarkable; and, after all, the Embassy garden was but a very inferior specimen of the art of the Japanese gardener.—Blackwood for April.

From Brigr. gen. Sir R. Napier, K.C.B., comdg. Gwalior div., to Sir W. R. Mansfield, K.C.B., chief of the staff.

Camp, Goonah, 25th Dec., 1858.

Sir,—I do myself the honour to forward copy of Capt. Rice's report of the complete surprise of the enemy under the rebel Feroz Shah, near Syore, on the night of the 22nd inst.

The rebels flying from Ranode on the 17th inst., went towards Chandeyree, but hearing of British troops at all the outlets to the eastward, Brigdr. Ainslie having moved out towards Ranode from Jhansie, and Col. Liddell from Lullutpore to Chandeyree, they turned suddenly westward, passing south of Esaughur and Pucharr, and when near Rampoor, between Goonah and Seronge, accidentally came upon Lieut. Stack's detach. of forty men of the 1st By. lancers, escorting remounts and clothing to Brigdr. Smith. The rebels captured the clothing of the detach. and one trooper, but Lieut. Stack brought up the rest of his men, and skirmishing with the enemy carried the remainder of his charge back to Goonah.

The rebels then went into the dense jungles of Arone, where they were surprised by Capt. Rice.

Although they did not lose many men killed, the capture of their horses and property must tend greatly to cripple and break up the party. I hear that two of the elephants were left in the Arone jungles, and may be recovered; therefore only two remaining with the enemy, who, after flying westward to near Puprail, have doubled back towards Chuppra, on which place Capt. Rice also is marching from Kunraj, where he was yesterday. I trust, therefore, that we may yet have an opportunity of destroying the remainder of Feroz Shah's party.

I beg most particularly to recommend to the favour of the rt. hon. the C. in C. Captain Rice, comdg. the Goonah detach., and the officers mentioned by him, Capt. Cochrane, Lieut. Festing, R.E., and Lieut. Waller, 35th B. N.I., and also the native commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the detachments of the 86th Regt., 25th B. N.I. and Meade's horse, for this very dashing and difficult enterprise, which has taught the enemy to distrust the security even of the deepest jungles, that have so often favoured their escape.

R. NAPIER, Brigdr. genl.,

Comdg. Gwalior Div.

From Capt. Rice, comdg. Goonah column, to Gen. Sir R. Napier, K.C.B., comdg. Gwalior div.

Dated Camp, Arone, 23rd Dec., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to report for your information that the Goonah column, strength as per margin, marched here from Bared, ten miles yesterday morning, and that a man who had lately been robbed of his horses by the rebels on their retreat past this town yesterday evening at half-past five p.m., reported to me that the enemy, whom he estimated at 2,000 (chiefly cavalry) strong, were encamped in a deep glen, in a very thick jungle, about eleven miles S.W. of this place, near Syore village. This man had just returned from their camp, on an unsuccessful visit to recover his property, and in revenge for being beaten and abused, gave me this, the sole information, I have hitherto been able to obtain from the people of this district regarding the rebels' movements. Leaving my camp standing in charge of forty-two men, the column was ordered at once to march, and left camp very silently by six p.m. Favoured by bright moonlight we arrived at the place indicated by eleven p.m., marching laterly through very dense jungle, and at once attacked the enemy's camp, which was situated in a deep ravine surrounded by vast jungle. Owing to the bad narrow rocky path our two guns could not keep up; pushed forward with the infantry only, consisting of twenty rank and file, roy. engrs., fifty rank and file H.M. 86th foot, and 1,000 rank and file 25th By.

* 2 guns, 9 pdrs. of the 4-2 B.A., 20 r. and f. R.E., 55 r. and f. H.M.'s 86th foot, 150 r. and f. H.M.'s 25th N.L.I., 140 Mead's horse.

N.L.I., under Lieuts. Feeting and Waller. We shot down the rebel picket, and charged completely through their long winding camp, causing the enemy to flee with the utmost despatch, and seek shelter among the dense foliage on all sides around their position. Owing to the great haste with which they fled merely a very few rebels were killed, but we captured nearly a hundred horses, several camels, many arms, and much clothing, with which the ground was everywhere covered. We had no loss. The rebels made no stand, and scarcely returned our fire. We passed the night on the enemy's encamping ground, and at dawn Capt. Cochrane, with one hundred Meade's horse, started in pursuit, while the rest of the Goonah column returned to Arone, and has just arrived. I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated Esaughur, 21st Dec., 1858. Brig. Smith, from whom I have just heard, was at Kache-Kaia 22nd Dec., and will be to-day at Seronge. I will communicate with him at once. Lieut. Stack's escort was attacked, as you suppose; his loss I do not know, but have heard two troopers 1st lancers were killed, while some camels and baggage were taken by the enemy. We found in the rebel camp last night some accoutrements belonging to 1st lancers, such as a sword, two carbines, caps, forage, belts, and clothing. I have sent messages by telegraph of my movements to Sir R. Hamilton and Maj. Macpherson. I have presented the guide fifty rupees service money, as promised him, for pointing out the rebel camp. Pending your further orders the Goonah column halts here.

W. RICE, Capt. 25th N.L.I.,
Comdg. Goonah column.

Action at Ranode.

From Brigdr. gen. Sir R. Napier, K.C.B., comdg. Gwalior div., to the chief of the staff.

Camp Ranode, Dec. 21, 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the rt. hon. the C. in C., that I received, on the morning of the 12th inst., intimation from Capt. McMahon, H.M.'s 14th drags., comdg. a small force near the confluence of the Jumna, Chumbul, and Sindh Rivers, that the rebels had passed into the Lohar Pergunnah of Kuchwazhur. Believing that their course would be up the jungles of the Sindh River, I marched from Gwalior, with a force as per margin,* at two p.m., on the 12th inst., intending to proceed to Dubbra, on the Jhansi road, and then, according to the information I might receive, to intercept the enemy.

At Autree, where the force rested during part of the night, I received, at two a.m. of the 13th, when on the point of proceeding to Dubbra, an express from the political agent of Gwalior, to the effect that his information led him to believe that the rebels would pass by Gohud to the north of Gwalior. This caused me to halt until I should receive by the morning post precise information from Capt. McMahon. At half-past ten a.m. the Tussildar of Autree informed me he had just ridden in from Dubbra, the very place of my destination, and had seen the smoke of the staging bungalow, which the rebels were then burning, and that they were proceeding in a south-westerly direction. I immediately marched south in pursuit; and at Beettiwar, where I arrived at half-past one a.m. of the 14th, I was informed that the enemy were three kos (in this country eight or nine miles) distant. The force had been on the move for thirteen and a-half hours, and required a rest. Owing to delay in getting grass and disposing of a rear party of the enemy's inf., in which some of the Mahratta horse, under fire for the first time, greatly distinguished themselves, I did not get away until ten a.m.

* No. 4 By. lt. fd. baty. 2 guns, under Capt. G. G. Brown: 14th lt. drags., 150 non-com. officers and men, under Brev. maj. R. B. Pretijohn; 2nd Gwalior Mahratta horse, 100 sabres, under Capt. F. H. Smith; 71st Highlanders lt. inf., 117 non-com. officers and men, under Maj. J. W. T. Rich; 25th By. N.I., 50 non-com. officers and men, under Lieut. J. F. Forbes; 40 camels Gwalior camel corps, under Capt. H. Templer.

I continued the pursuit through Nurwar, where I left behind the greater portion of the detach. of the 71st and the art., which could not keep up with me, and took on merely the cav. and thirty-eight men of the 71st highlanders on camels, and twenty-five of the Bolundshuhur horse, that were halted at Nurwar, on their way to Kerara, owing to the news of the enemy's approach; and after a very exciting though fatiguing chase we overtook the rebels on the morning of the 17th at Ranode. Their course had been south of Nurwar and through the Amola Pass, and their direction appeared to be along the right bank of the Scinde.

Twice we were encamped within a few miles of them, but owing to the darkness and our ignorance of the country, and to its hilly and jungly character, we could not take advantage of it. They chose the most difficult and unfrequented paths, evidently guided by some one well acquainted with them. Once or twice we were close on their traces and cut off stragglers or took their horses, the riders throwing themselves off, and darting into the dense thickets, which almost closed up the paths. At one moment I believed they were driven into the hands of Col. Scudamore, H.M.'s 14th drags., who, according to the instructions and information I had sent him, had posted his detach. on the right bank of the Sindh, below Kolarus, to intercept them. I expected every moment to hear his guns open, when I found, on getting into a more open country, that the enemy had turned away from the river, and were going towards Ranode. They took a circuitous and difficult road through the jungles, whilst we marched by a more easy and direct one, where the country was more open. I found the people of Ranode in great excitement, and was informed that the enemy was close at hand, and in full march to attack them, guided by Byroo Sing, of Tehrea, a rebel zemindar, whose fort, a few miles off, had been recently destroyed by Scindiah. The enemy advanced in an irregular mass, extending in a front of nearly a mile. Their numbers must have increased since they crossed the Jumna. Their guide, Byroo Sing, as we have since learnt, had promised them plenty of plunder and an easy prey.

We had barely time to form up the 14th drags. when the enemy were within a few hundred yards. The Mahratta horse were impeded in crossing a deep ravine by the riding camels, and were thus a little behind. Our force actually engaged consisted of 133 of H.M.'s 14th drags., commanded by Capt. Pretijohn, 60 of the Mahratta horse under Capt. F. H. Smith, 38 of the 71st highlanders under Capt. Smith, mounted on camels and guided by Capt. Templer, comdg. corps.

It was a most complete surprise. The 14th drags., excellently led by Capt. Pretijohn, dashed at once into the centre of the enemy, who never attempted to stand as a body, though individuals died fighting desperately. Capt. Pretijohn having received a severe wound, the command devolved on Capt. Need, who, with much energy and judgment, continued the pursuit for nearly eight miles, cutting up great numbers, particularly at the end where the fugitives were stopped by a ravine, those who could cross it taking refuge in a jungle impracticable for cav.

The Mahratta horse have only been recently enrolled, but their spirited conduct is highly creditable to them and to their comdg. officer, Capt. F. H. Smith, whom I beg to recommend. Also Capt. C. F. Smith, comdg. detach. of H.M.'s 71st, and Capt. Temple, for the effective manner in which they brought up their small force.

Lieut. Giles, of the 14th drags., and Lieut. Gough, of the Mahratta horse, are very favourably mentioned by their comdg. officers. I am greatly indebted to Dr. Cruickshank for his prompt and extreme attention to the wounded. Mr. Apothecary Waite, an old and excellent servant of the Govt., who has been present with the 14th drags. in every engagement, was in the field, and performed valuable service. I am under great obligations to Capt. Todd, 14th drags., asst. adj. gen., and Capt. Lumsden, asst. qr. mr. gen., for their invaluable aid at all hours during the pursuit, and in the action. Capt. Lumsden's experience of irregular warfare was of great service. My a. d. c.,

Lieut. Anderson, of the 1st Bombay lancers, has been constantly at my side, and has given me very great satisfaction.

Mulik Sahib Khan Tewana being on a visit to me on leave, volunteered his services, and accompanied me during the pursuit and in the action.

Jemadar Jehan Khan, of the Tewana horse, temporarily attached to the Mahratta horse, behaved with great gallantry, and received six wounds whilst singly engaged with several of the enemy, of whom he killed one and wounded others, and I beg to solicit for him the order of "British India."

Capt. Need mentions very favourably the forward conduct of Regimental Serg. Maj. Thomas Clarke and Corporal George Best, of h. t. H.M.'s 14th drags.

I had on a former occasion the honour to report the good service performed by two of the officers above-mentioned, Capt. Todd and Prettijohn, of H.M.'s 14th drags., for their distinguished conduct in the action with Tantia Topce at Jowra, Alipore; but I fear from some accident that my report has not reached the rt. hon. the C. in C. I therefore beg permission to submit a copy of it, and most earnestly solicit the favour and protection of the rt. hon. the C. in C. and the Govt., for the officers and soldiers therein mentioned, as well as for those named in this report.

R. NAPIER, Brigdr. gen.

Comdg. Gwalior div.

From Capt. Need, 14th (King's) L. Dragns., to the Asst. Adj. Gen. Gwalior Div.

Camp Ranode, 17th Dec., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the Gen. comdg., that on Capt. Prettijohn becoming disabled this morning from a severe wound, I assumed command of the squad. 14th drags., strength 133 sabres, in pursuit of the rebels, following them for about seven miles, cutting up great numbers, and capturing several elephants, horses, &c. I beg to bring to the Gen.'s notice the good services rendered by Lieut. Giles, and all under command, as well as by Capt. Lumsden, asst. qr. mr. gen., and Lieut. Gough, Mahratta horse, who accompanied the squad.

The gallant conduct of Corporal Best, 14th drags., came particularly under my notice, but where every man of the squad. behaved so well, and did such good service, it is almost unjust for me to recommend any man in particular.

The pursuit was principally through low jungle, very bad ground, and full of holes, which will account for the great number of missing horses in the casualty report.

ARTHUR NEED,
Capt. 14th Dragns.

Capt. Woodland at Kirwee.

No. 185 of 1859.—The Rt. Hon. the Gov. gen. of India in Council has much satisfaction in publishing the following letter from Maj. gen. Whitlock, comdg. Saugor F. D., submitting the report of Capt. Woodland, of an attack by the rebels on the Palace of Kirwee, in repelling which that officer and his brave garrison well earned for themselves the commendation bestowed on them by Maj. gen. Whitlock.

To the Adj. gen. of the Bengal Army, Allahabad.
Dated Camp, Kirwee, 28th Dec., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour, for the information of the Rt. Hon. the C. in C., to acquaint you that on the evening of the 23rd inst. I received at Mahoba, at seven o'clock p.m., an express from Kirwee, to the effect that between five and six thousand rebels, six hundred of whom were sepoys, had attacked the palace, surrounded it, and were keeping up a very heavy fire from all sides.

I started at nine o'clock with the hd. qrs. of the div.,* and marched to Kirwee, a distance of eighty-three miles, in thirty-seven hours. I found that the rebels, hearing of our approach, had abandoned their intention of making a second attack ; their first having been repul-ed, and had fled to the hills close in the vicinity of Kirwee.

The Rewah levies, under Lieut. col. Hinde, from Bandah, reached this place, a distance of forty-eight miles, in thirty-three hours.

The detachments of the 3rd Eur. Sappers and Miners and 50th regt., N.I., which marched from Mahoba at the same time with div. hd. qrs., arrived here last night. They would have come in at the same time with the Rewah levies in the morning but that I had directed them to halt ten miles from this, as there was then no necessity for their forcing on.

I cannot speak in terms of too high praise of the cheerfulness, alacrity and spirit displayed by every grade on the occasion, and I have no hesitation in stating that the safety of the palace, and the garrison which held it, may be attributed to the opportune arrival of the art. and cav., as I have ascertained that the rebels after their first repulse had taken forcible possession of a gun from a neighbouring rajah to bring before the place.

I now perform a very gratifying duty in submitting the report of Capt. Woodland, 1st regt. N. I., the officer comdg. the garrison, for Lord Clyde's information, and beg to bring this officer most prominently under his lordship's notice. Capt. Woodland's gallantry and perseverance in holding the palace with so small a force are most creditable to him, and will, I trust, be considered worthy of his lordship's favourable consideration.

Capt. Richardson, of H.M.'s 43rd regt. L. I., was most active and energetic throughout, and I beg to bring his name also to his lordship's notice.

Jamodar Shikh Mustapha, 1st regt. M. N. I., seems to have been indefatigable in the performance of his duty, and Capt. Woodland and Richardson speak in the highest terms of this native officer's services.

Coloursergt. Green, H.M.'s 43rd regt. L. I., and Serg. Smith, of the R. A., have merited favourable mention of their names in Capt. Woodland's despatch.

The conduct of all ranks in the garrison is spoken of as deserving every commendation and will, I trust, be favourably received by his lordship, the rt. hon. the C. in C.

G. WHITLOCK, Maj. gen.,
Comdg. Saugor F. D.

To the Asst. Adj. Gen., Saugor F. D.

Dated Palace, Kirwee, 25th Dec., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to report for the information of the Maj. Gen. comdg., that on the night of the 20th inst. I received intelligence that a large body of the rebels under Radha Govindh and Runmut Singh, estimated at from five to six thousand, of whom six hundred were disciplined troops, were advancing to attack this place.

I immediately paraded the troops * under my command, and offered shelter within the palace to the inhabitants of the place, many of whom availed themselves of it.

At two p.m. numbers of the rebels crossed the roads on all sides leading to the palace, availing themselves of every cover to avoid our fire, ultimately occupying the immediately surrounding houses, whence they kept up a heavy and well directed fire, to which we replied with such effect that they speedily retired to a greater distance, still maintaining their fire as vigorously as ever, until six p.m., when finding all their efforts ineffectual, they suspended operations, but from the fact of four scaling ladders having been found after the enemy had finally retired, it is evident that their only object was to concert a second and more resolute attack, in which they were fortunately baffled by the timely arrival on the morning of the 25th inst. of the force under the immediate command of Maj. Gen. Whitlock.

As the enemy carried off their killed and wounded, I am unable to estimate the number of casualties they sustained, but I am happy to say that only one matchlockman belonging to the Tahsildar of the place was killed on our side.

I am much indebted and beg to return my best thanks to Capt. W. S. Richardson, H.M.'s 43rd L.I., whose zeal and activity were most conspicuous throughout the affair; Jemadar Sikh Mustapha, 1st regt. N.I., Colour serg. Green, H.M.'s 43rd L.I., and Serg. Smith, of the R.A., also merit my highest praise. To the above I would also add the name of Assistant Apothecary Isaacke as deserving of commendation.

In conclusion, I beg to point out that the troops were under arms from midnight of the 20th inst. till ten a.m. of the 25th inst.; during the whole of this time the strenuous and unremitting exertions of all ranks, native and European, entitle them to the highest praise.

The Maj. gen., from his local knowledge of the place, will appreciate the difficulties that had to be overcome; not only was the discipline portion of the enemy vastly superior to our small garrison, but the ineligibility of the place for purposes of defence, the necessity that existed of previously demolishing the surrounding houses, in which labour we were actually occupied on the approach of the enemy, the inferior description of ordnance* with which we were provided, one of which burst with the first round, and the better want of means of bringing the same into position, were no trifling obstacles to overcome, and I consider that I should do ill justice to the uniform cheerfulness and alacrity of all ranks were I to forbear bringing those points prominently to the notice of superior authority.

I must not omit to add that the Tehsildar and Cutwal of the place were of great service in procuring intelligence of the movements of the enemy.

Defeat of Radha Govind.

No. 49 of 1859.—The rt. hon. the Gov. gen. of India in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following report from Maj. gen. Whitlock, comdg. Saugor F. D., of an action with the rebels under Radha Govind, in the heights of the Punwarree.

The success of the Maj. gen.'s operations has afforded the Gov. gen. in Council great satisfaction, and H.E. in Council desires to acknowledge the excellent services of the officers and men who were engaged on this occasion.

No. 5.

To Maj. gen. Sir W. Mansfield, K.C.B., Chief of the Staff, Allahabad.

Sir,—His lordship the C. in C. has been informed of the relief of Kirwee by the troops under my command on the morning of the 25th inst., and I now have the honour to submit for the information of Lord Clyde a report of my further operations against the rebels.

II. The enemy had only retired to the heights of Punwarree, which, with several villages in the neighbourhood, Radha Govind had occupied in force from three to four miles distance from Kirwee by the direct road, which was totally impassable for guns.

III. His troops also were reported to hold the village of "Dudree" in his rear, thirteen miles from this place by a road over the hills, which was barely passable for our artillery.

IV. To have attacked Radha Govind in his front only would have produced the same disappointing results as our forces have so often experienced, retreat after defeat, where inf. could not have followed.

V. It was then most desirable to convey troops well to the rear on what was conjectured would be Radha Govind's line of retreat, without his knowledge.

VI. From the excellent information furnished me by the collector, Mr. Mayne, and from the secrecy with which it was kept, I was enabled to make mature arrangements, and without sound of bugle and camp left standing. The troops assembled on the morning of the 29th, and moved in three separate columns to their respective positions.

* Royal Artillery—1 sergeant, 1 bombardier, 9 gunners; total 11. H.M.'s 43rd Regt.—1 captain, 1 sergeant, 34 rank and file; total, 36. 1st Regt. M.N.I.—1 jemadar, 6 havildars, 58 rank and file; total, 65.

VII. The right column under Major Mein, comdg. officer of art., which I accompanied. 2. The centre column under Lieut. col. Hinde, comdg. Rewah levies. 3. The left column under Capt. Southey, 3rd Mad. Europeans.

VIII. The strength of the several columns is given in the Calcutta Gazette.

IX. The reports of the operations of the three columns accompany this, and I am most gratified to find all my instructions have been carried out with the utmost precision.

X. I had not anticipated the opposition made by Radha Govind, nor did I contemplate his awaiting attack, but I learnt afterwards that he had determined to die on the spot, which was one of great sanctity, wearied as he was with constant fear of being captured, and from the harassing clamours of his followers of arrears of pay and supply of provisions; he had sent away his elephant, which was afterwards captured.

XI. They in Lieut. col. Hinde's camp, who know Radha Govind, recognised him and his brother dead on the field when the gallant troops of the lieut. col. had reached the summit of the heights.

XII. It is now a pleasing duty to recommend Lieut. col. Hinde to the very favourable notice of his lordship the C. in C. 2. I went over the position which had been assigned to Lieut. col. Hinde, and it is but justice to praise that officer's admirable arrangements for attack, the gallantry of his troops, and the alacrity with which the heights were stormed when the advance was ordered. 3. The compy. of H.M.'s 43rd L.I. under Capt. Disbrowe, worked up his heights with their well-known energy and knowledge of the duties of light troops, and, with their officer, deserve all approbation. 4. It was the first time the Rewah levies had been regularly opposed to the enemy, and from the various accounts of their conduct, they deserve every praise. 5. Capt. Mathias, Lieut. Cracroft and Mr. Kirke, of the Rewah levies, behaved most gallantly. 6. It is with much satisfaction that I solicit his lordship's attention to the names of the native officers mentioned by Lieut. col. Hinde, and especially to that of Acting Jemadar Adjoondah Sing and Subadar Rajkoop Oosundra; the latter mentioned by Capt. Pasley. 7. The detach. 50th N.I. co-operated in the movement, and behaved well under Ens. Gosling. 8. The guns worked by a detach. of the R.A. were very much exposed for some time to heavy flanking fire, whilst the enemy's battery found their range, but our guns, notwithstanding, were most active in silencing the musketry fire of the enemy and distracting their attention from the inf., who steadily advanced and captured the batty. 9. Capt. Pasley has been noticed by Lieut. col. Hinde most favourably, and he, with his fine and able body of men, deserve my best thanks. 10. The conduct also of Dr. Macfarlane, the field surgeon, has called forth commendation. I well know the value of this officer's services on all occasions, which prove him worthy of my special recommendation to the most favourable consideration of Lord Clyde.

XIII. The left column under Capt. Southey, performed its duties most efficiently, and that officer deserves favourable mention to his lordship, to whom I beg to recommend him. 2. Lieut. Thompson, of the Madras H.A., in charge of the mortars, Lieut. Hodges, of the 1st Madras N.I., and Ens. Sheffield, of the 3rd Madras Eur. regt., have been favourably noticed by Capt. Southey. 3. My Assist. adj. gen., Lieut. Williams, of the 3rd Eur., whom I attached to this column, an intelligent zealous officer, is spoken of very favourably. 4. It is true this column was not so exposed to the heavy fire the centre column had to encounter, but its movement on the left was of the greatest importance, compelling the enemy to keep the centre road, which threw them back on the right column; the art., cav., and inf., which were so opportunely and skilfully posted by Maj.

Mein, leading to a heavy loss of the enemy, together with the capture of two elephants with the Radha Govind's state silver howdah, and his palanqueens, with a mass of correspondence. So great was the surprise of the enemy on finding the country occupied by our troops around the village of "Dudree" that they were completely bewildered. Flying in all directions to the jungles, a body took shelter in a hill thickly studded with jungle close at hand. The activity of the cav., the watchfulness of the art., who were everywhere, prevented their escape, and a party of 3rd Eur. and sappers, under Lieut. Campbell, killed the whole, amounting to 120. A small party of the 3rd Madras Eur., under Lieut. Hunt, used their bayonets and Enfields most effectually, killing several.

XIV. I beg permission to bring Maj. Mein to the special notice of Lord Clyde. His arrival on his ground was so admirably timed, and his disposition of his troops so judicious, that they effected all that could be expected from them. 2. The state of the ghaut, which extends about a mile, at one time almost frustrated the hope of bringing up the guns to the summit, but it was effected without accident, and the A troop Madras H.A. claim my every acknowledgment and cordial thanks for their skill and their energetic perseverance in surmounting obstacles which really appeared at times to baffle all further progress. 3. Capt. Menagan, comdg. the troops, and Lieuts. Stewart and Anderson, deserve the greatest praise for the celerity with which their guns were moved, and always to the proper place, to act if occasion required. Lieut. Anderson's capture of the two elephants was a most dashing affair. 4. Capt. Harrison, art. brig. maj., a smart and active officer, attracted my attention to the able manner in which I saw him convey orders to every part of the field.

XV. Maj. Prior, of H.M.'s 12th royal lancers, moved his squad most efficiently, and deserves every notice, whilst his men, first employed in vidette duties, then in operations on the enemy, evinced a conduct most praiseworthy.

XVI. The gallant squad of the Hyderabad contingent was here, as always, zealous, brave, and energetic. Capt. Macintire was at their head, and his conduct was, as usual, most gallant. 2. Of Surg. Bradley, Hyderabad contingent, I cannot speak too highly. Whatever his duties have been, however heavy his medical charge, he has always been at his post, and here as elsewhere has ever merited commendation. May I respectfully solicit his lordship's special notice of this officer, who has been with his squad in the field since Sept., 1857, without interruption.

XVII. Capt. Lawder, my assist. qr. mr. gen., merits my best acknowledgments. He was most zealous in seeing my orders carried out for the formation of the troops, and most useful to me throughout the day.

XVIII. Lieut. Heath, of the commissariat depart., had two days' provisions in the field before the fight was over. He is young in the depart., but he conducted his duties most satisfactorily.

XIX. My A.D.C., Lieut. Heman, 50th Madras N.I., was most useful to me during the day, as also Maj. Mayne, dep. judge adv. gen. to the div., and Lieut. Howes, assist. field eng., who acted as my orderly officer.

XX. The supdt. surg., Dr. Davidson, made all the medical arrangements satisfactorily.

XXI. I must not omit to mention the name of Mr. Mayne, the collr. of the dist., and to respectfully beg Lord Clyde will be pleased to bring this gentleman's name to the notice of the rt. hon. the gov. gen. 2. His excellent information, his knowledge of the country, the spirit with which he co-operated with me in preventing all possible mistakes by not only procuring trustworthy guides, but in moving with two of the columns to their respective positions, is deserving of the highest commendation, and I beg most earnestly to bring this gentleman to the special notice of Lord Canning.

XXII. In conclusion, I would beg to add that no troops could have behaved better after the fatigues of a very heavy march. Sustained by the cheerful spirit of the soldier, they at last met the enemy, defeated him with the loss of more than 300 killed, including the rebel leader and his brother, and several wounded. We captured four guns, four elephants, the destruction of a large quantity of gunpowder, capture of numerous arms and accoutrements belonging to mutineers; several horses also, amongst them Radha Govind's, which had been taken by the enemy at their attack on Kirwee, and the troops crowned the day by a return to camp of thirteen miles, which they reached in the best of spirits, without a casualty or scarce a straggler, at nine p.m., having been under arms, with the exception of two hours rest after the action, since two a.m.

XXIII. The effects of the operations of the 29th is already visible, the rebels having fled from these districts to the south dismayed and dispirited, and I learned, with the exception of some few scattered here and there, that this part of the country is clear of them.

Hon. the Governor in Council, the enclosed letter, No. 301, dated the 23rd ult., with accompaniment from Maj. gen. Roberts, late comdg. Dated 23rd Nov., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to forward the accompanying letter from Lieut. col. Tremenhare, dated 16th inst., which I request you will submit for the favourable notice of H.E. the C. in C.

Hd. Qrs. Northern Div. Army, Camp near Ahmedabad, 3rd Nov., 1858.

From Lieut. col. Tremenhare, comdg. engr., N. F. F., to Maj. gen. Roberts, comdg. Northern div.

Bombay, Nov. 16, 1858.

Sir,—I beg permission to request your attention to the reprint of your despatch, relating to the operations of the Rajpootana f. f. under your orders against the Gwalior rebels at Sanganeer on the 8th Aug. last, which has appeared in various newspapers, as in the detail of the force engaged, the detach. 11th comp. R.E., under Lieut. Magnay has been omitted, and only half, instead of the whole 3rd comp. sappers and miners under Lieut. Gumbier, is specified.

Lieut. Magnay and the detach. under his orders, employed as an escort to the 8-inch hwzr., were for a considerable time under fire, and the 3rd comp. sappers and miners were similarly employed in support of the lt. fld. batt. throughout the whole of the movements before the enemy on that occasion.

I have not had an opportunity of ascertaining whether these omissions occur in the despatch as officially published; but if through an oversight they should exist in the original document, I trust you will be good enough to rectify the circumstance to the adjt. genl. of the army, in order that there may be an official record of the service performed by the officers and men alluded to.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

WEDNESDAY, April 6, 1859.

DISMISSAL OF THE HONORARY MAGISTRATES.

At the commencement of the mutinies the Bengal Government invested several of the most influential and respectable planters with the powers of a justice of the peace. The appointment was purely honorary, so far as remuneration for time and labour was concerned, but it was, nevertheless, prized by the planters, as a recognition of their social position on the part of the authorities. It had long been the custom for the natives in the district to refer their disputes to the English Sahib in preference to their own countrymen, and thus practically very many planters exercised the functions of unaccredited magistrates. The civilians, however, affected to look down upon all residents who were not in the service of the Government, and lost no opportunity of slighting these "adventurers." The natives were not slow to perceive the ill-feeling that existed between the privileged and non-privileged foreigners, and naturally took advantage of it to misprize the latter. But when the Government threw its mantle over the hitherto despised planters, and invested them with magisterial attributes, a great change was immediately observable in the bearing and demeanour of the natives. The result of this measure proved highly beneficial, and even Mr. Halliday, the Lieutenant Governor—certainly no friend of the "interlopers"—bore witness to the assiduity, intelligence, and impartiality displayed by the honorary magistrates at a most critical period. It is acknowledged, indeed, on all hands that they have rendered excellent service in the administration of justice. The experiment having thus far succeeded so well, it might have been expected that it would be still further extended, and that similar appointments would be made in the Upper Provinces. Such a notion, however, would only argue utter ignorance of the train of thought peculiar to Bengal civilians. They consent to tolerate the Uncovenanted Magistrates as a decidedly subordinate branch of the service, but for honorary magistrates they have no toleration. These appointments, therefore, having been found to work so well are now to cease and determine, and the planters are once more to be taught "to know their place." It is possible, however, that the Secretary of State for India may take a different view of the case, and decline to sacrifice public interests in order to gratify the vanity of individuals. In this anticipation we shall do no more at present than draw his lordship's attention to this last caprice on the part of the Indian Government.

THE COMPENSATION PETITION.

We mentioned in our last summary of news from India that the Calcutta Compensation Committee had requested Lord Ellenborough in the Upper House, and Mr. Roebuck in the Lower, to present a petition to Parliament on the subject of their claims. The petitioners express their belief that one million and a-half sterling would cover the whole amount of losses sustained by British and East Indian Christians; but they appear to overlook the equally good claims of Hindoos and Mahomedans who suffered through their fidelity to the British Government. In support of their petition they refer to the precedents of the American war, and the Irish and Canadian rebellions; in all of which cases "the sufferers on the side of the Crown received compensation." The municipal law of Great Britain is also in favour of the principle, which was likewise recognised under the Mahomedan rule. The amnesty proclaimed by command of her Majesty deprives the claimants of all hope of redress through the action of the legal courts, supposing they could lay hands upon those by whom they were wronged, and in some instances ruined. As the Government, then, has closed all other ways of recovering their losses, it is bound to accord the satisfaction which, through its acts, has become otherwise unattainable. "Some of the British sufferers," the petitioners go on to say, "are zemindars, and have been required to pay the Government revenue or rent for periods when their districts were in the power of the rebels, and at a time when they were out of possession of their estates. Many were leaseholders under native zemindars, and they have been required to pay their rents to those zemindars for the period when the zemindars themselves were engaged passively or actively in the rebellion; so that to the sufferers the consequences of the rebellion are aggravated both by the non-recognition of their claims and by the want of an appropriate or just policy on the part of the Government towards them."

In conclusion, the petitioners point out the sources whence their losses may be made good—such as forfeited lands and Government securities, the reduction of the pension list of the late native army, and the extinction of the allowances paid to the royal family of Delhi and the descendants of the Peishwa. But, with the exception of the forfeited jagheers and Government paper, it is clear that the petitioners have made an egregious blunder in supposing that the reduction of the pensions has placed any funds at the disposal of a bankrupt exchequer. That there are fewer pensions to pay is no doubt a great relief to an exhausted treasury; but that circumstance has not filled the public coffers, and afforded supplies for the payment of compensation to these claimants. It produces, in short, a negative, not a positive result. However, we trust that the British Parliament will not turn a deaf ear to the prayer of these long-expectant and much-enduring petitioners, but with characteristic generosity will vote a prompt and liberal grant to the unfortunate sufferers by the Indian mutiny.

HOW THE MONEY GOES.

On the motion of Sir Frederick Smith a return of the actual strength of the military force in the Presidencies of Bengal and Madras, and in the Punjab, has lately been printed by order of the House of Commons. From this important document may be gathered in some degree the cause of the enormous increase in the Indian expenditure for the past and current years. In Bengal we find that on the 1st October, 1858, there were 2 troops of horse and 13 companies of foot of the Royal Artillery, or 2,658 men in all; of Cavalry, 6 regiments, including 2nd Battalion Military Train, or 3,128 men; and of Infantry 45 regiments, or 40,602 men—making a total of 2,510 commissioned officers, and 43,878 non-commissioned officers and privates. Then, of her Majesty's Indian forces there were 3 brigades of Horse Artillery, or 1,332 men, besides 257 gun Lascars attached; 6 battalions of European Foot Artillery, or 2,744 men, with 509 gun Lascars; and 3 battalions of Native Foot Artillery, or 687 men, with 115 gun Lascars—making a total of 331 European commissioned officers, 3,058 European non-commissioned officers and privates, and 2,255 native commissioned and non-commissioned officers and privates. Of European Light Cavalry there were 4 regiments 1,817 strong; Bengal Yeomanry Cavalry 267, of whom 25 are European officers; Governor General's Body Guard, 131; European Infantry, 4 regiments, 2,852; European Invalids, 73 officers; European Veteran Company, 28 non-commissioned officers; Sappers and Miners, 1,021; Native Infantry, 25 regiments, and the remnants of 5 others, 17,438; Irregular Cavalry, 12 regiments, 5,317; Ramgurh Irregular Cavalry, 179; Mooltanee regiment of Cavalry, 679; Benares Horse, 215; Meade's Horse, 504; Alexander's Horse, 473; Hodson's Horse, 2 regiments, 1,077; Camel Corps, 370; Assam Local Artillery Battery, 110; Sebundy Corps of Sappers and Miners, 216; Infantry, 31 local regiments, 19,305; Lahore Light Horse, 149; Meerut Light Horse, 130; and Peshawur Light Horse, 341—making a grand total of 1,344 European commissioned officers, 5,494 European non-commissioned officers and privates, and 45,854 natives of all ranks. Summarising these returns thus far, we find the military force in Bengal amounted to 4,185 European commissioned officers, 52,430 European non-commissioned officers and privates, and 48,109 natives of all ranks; in all 104,724 fighting men. In addition to this truly formidable host there were 3 cavalry corps and 12 infantry corps in the civil department in the Lower Provinces of the Bengal Presidency, comprising 13 European commissioned officers, 27 European non-commissioned officers, and 664 natives of all ranks. But this is far from being the entire armed force at the disposal, or at least at the expense of Government. On the 1st November, 1858, there were serving in the Punjab—Police, 3,884 Cavalry, 6,425 Infantry; Levies, 2,664 Cavalry, 4,765 Infantry. Serving in the Delhi territory: Police—1,444 Cavalry, 2,872 Infantry; Levies—979 Cavalry, 1,045 Infantry. Serving in Hindostan: Police—2,088 Infantry; Levies—1,545 Cavalry. Thus the civil troops under the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab amounted on the 1st of November to 5,328 Police Cavalry, 11,385 Police Infantry, 5,188 Mounted Levies, and 5,810 Foot Levies; in all, to 27,711 men trained as soldiers, and in every respect ready to take the field as a military force. The grand total of the military force in the Bengal Presidency at the above-mentioned date was no less than 139,139 men and officers. But let it not be supposed that we have yet completed the long and heavy list of non-productive citizens maintained at the cost of the State. We have yet to take into consideration the police and other civil corps regularly organised and disciplined. These in the Punjab and the Lower Provinces comprise 34,375 men, and in Oude and the North-Western Provinces 34,323; or an additional force in all of 68,698 men. Can it be possible that in a pacified country, with a population generally well affected to the British rule, it is necessary to maintain upwards of 200,000 men in arms? It is idle to talk of loans, or public works, or the development of the natural resources of the country, while such an incubus presses upon the sinews of the State. Until the military expenditure is reduced by at least one-third of its present outlay, there can be no hope of preserving a balance in the finance.

The Bombay returns have not yet been received, but those from Madras enable us to state that the Royal troops in that presidency in October last consisted of Horse Artillery 233 men; Foot Artillery, 678; two regiments of Cavalry, 1,287; and eight regiments of Infantry, 9,528; in all, 409 officers and 11,317 non-commissioned officers and privates. Her Majesty's Indian forces comprised at the same date three regiments European Infantry, 2,750 strong; one brigade European Horse Artillery, 718; four battalions European Foot Artillery, 1,888, with 1,012 gun Lascars, &c., one battalion native Foot Artillery 655, with 528 gun Lascars, besides 66 Lascars attached to the Royal Artillery; East India Artillery drivers, 49; seven regiments Native Light Cavalry, 2,999; 55 regiments Native Infantry, with Sappers and Miners, Madras Sapper Militia, Pegu Police Battalion, and two Native Veteran Battalions, 60,341; and seven corps appertaining to the civil department, 1,958. Analysing this force, we divide it into 1,103 European officers, 6012, European non-commissioned officers and privates, and 66,849 natives of all ranks. The Madras military establishment, therefore, in October last, disposed of the services of 1,512 European officers, 16,329 European non-commissioned officers and privates, and 66,849 natives.

PROMOTION IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Whereas, we have judged it expedient to revise those parts of Our Royal Warrants of the 6th day of October, 1854, and 3rd day of November, 1854, which regulate the promotion and retirement of Combatant Officers in Our Army and Ordnance Corps, Our will and pleasure is, that from the date of this Our Royal Warrant, Our Governor General in Council shall govern himself by these Our rules in recommending Combatant Officers for promotion in Our Indian Military Forces.

PROMOTION.

1. That the rank of Field-Marshal be given without reference to seniority.

2. That there shall be a fixed establishment of General Officers, viz.:—

Generals .. .. .	25
Lieutenant Generals .. .	50
Major Generals .. .	145

3. That Colonels may be appointed, without regard to seniority, to commands as Major Generals, with temporary rank; and if they shall have conducted themselves to Our satisfaction, such temporary rank, after having been held for five years in peace, or for any shorter period in war, may, upon the recommendation of Our Governor General in Council, be made permanent. That the temporary rank of General and Lieutenant General may also be given, whenever the convenience of the Service required it, and may be made permanent in a similar manner.

4. That every vacancy on the fixed establishment of General Officers shall be filled by the promotion of the senior Colonel qualified to succeed to the rank of Major General and to be placed on the fixed establishment, under the regulations now in force; or by a supernumerary Major General, as provided in clause 6.

5. That, in addition to the Colonels promoted by seniority to be Major Generals, and those promoted after having held temporary rank under the regulation in Clause 3, Colonels shall be eligible for promotion to the rank of Major General, and Major Generals to the rank of Lieutenant General, and Lieutenant Generals to the rank of General, for distinguished services in the field.

In the case of Officers promoted to the rank of General Officers, as a reward for distinguished service in war, the recommendation, in which the service of the Officer shall be detailed, shall be published in the General Orders of Our Indian Military Forces, and in the London Gazette.

6. That all Colonels promoted to be Major Generals after five years' employment in responsible commands with the temporary rank of Major General under the provisions in Clause 3, and all Colonels promoted to be Major Generals for distinguished service in the field, shall be placed on a supernumerary list of Major Generals, and shall not be reckoned as part of the fixed establishment until the time when they would have attained the rank of Major General by seniority; that is to say, until the Colonel who originally stood next senior on the Colonels' list to the Officer promoted out of his turn has become a Major General, after which the next vacancy will be filled by the transfer of the supernumerary Major General to the fixed establishment. The Major Generals who have already been promoted out of their turn, and would not yet have succeeded to that rank by seniority, shall be considered as coming under this rule.

The supernumerary Major Generals, when absorbed into the fixed establishment, shall preserve the seniority which they acquired when, after a period of qualifying service with temporary rank, they were first confirmed as permanent Major Generals on the supernumerary list, and shall rise by that seniority to be Lieutenant Generals in succession. General Officers promoted for distinguished service in the field will take their seniority from the date of their promotion, as stated in the London Gazette.

7. That three separate lists of General Officers be inserted in the Army List of Our Indian Military Forces, the first containing the names of those on the fixed establishment; the second, those who, having been promoted out of their regular turn, are supernumerary to the fixed establishment; and the third, those who have retired from the service with the honorary rank of General Officers.

8. That the rank of Colonel be given to Officers, after serving for five years with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, in the actual command of Regiments, or for the same period as second Lieutenant Colonels of regiments, or on the Staff, in the following situations:—viz., Adjutant General, Quartermaster General, Deputy Adjutant General, Deputy Quartermaster General, Secretaries to the Government of India in the Military and Public Works Departments, Secretaries in the Military Department to the Governments of Madras and Bombay, to the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, the Commissioner in Mysore, and the Resident at Hyderabad; Judge Advocate General, Commissary General, Deputy Commissary General, Inspector General of Ordnance, Superintendent of the Ordnance Manufacturing Department, Chief Engineer, Superintending Engineer, Surveyor General of India, subject always to the approval of the Governor in Council and Commander in Chief of the Presidency to which the Officer belongs.

9. That Regimental Majors, who are Brevet Lieutenant Colonels, falling into the command of Regiments in the absence of the Lieutenant Colonel, shall, on attaining the rank of Regimental Lieutenant Colonel, reckon the period commencing from the completion of the first month of such temporary command, as part of the five years required to qualify for the rank of Colonel.

10. That the rank of Colonel be given to Officers who obtain the rank of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel for services in the field, after eight years of actual service with that rank.

11. That in cases where a Regiment may be so divided as to constitute two distinct commands, and one portion may be under the command of the Regimental Major, who is also a Brevet Lieutenant Colonel, and in cases where a Brevet Lieutenant Colonel may be in command of a mixed force of different corps, a discretionary power shall be vested in Our Commander in Chief in India, subject to the approval of Our Governor General of India in Council, to allow such service, or portions of such service, to count as part of the qualifying period for promotion to the rank of Colonel.

12. That Lieutenant Colonels appointed to Civil Situations under Government on or after the date of this Our Royal warrant shall be promoted to the rank of Colonel after eight years' service in the former rank, provided the nature of the Civil appointment be considered by Our Governor General of India in Council and Commander in Chief in India calculated to give the Officer such practical experience as may afterwards prove advantageous to the Corps or Service to which he belongs.

13. That Field Officers, commissioned as such before the 20th June, 1854, be allowed to rise by brevet as heretofore; but no Officer promoted to the rank of Field Officer on or after that date, is hereafter to rise from the rank of Lieutenant Colonel to that of Colonel, otherwise than by five or eight years' service in the former rank, as provided in Clause 8, or as a reward for distinguished service, or by appointment to be Queen's Aide de Camp—except under the special provisions in Clauses 9, 10, 11, and 12.

14. Lieutenant Colonels who held that rank prior to the 20th of June, 1854, shall be promoted by a special brevet to the rank of Colonel, —commissions to bear date the 28th November, 1854; and such of the said Lieutenant Colonels as have been passed over by officers who have attained the rank of Colonel in conformity with the provisions of Our Royal Warrants of the 6th October and 3rd November, 1854, shall be restored to the respective places which they would have occupied as Colonels, had they been promoted in ordinary succession under the system of periodical brevets.

15. That promotions shall be made from Captain to Major, and from Major to Lieutenant Colonel, in succession, as vacancies occur in the Major General's fixed establishment.

16. That any Captain, Major, or Lieutenant Colonel may be rewarded by brevet promotion for distinguished services in the field.

17. That the commands of General Officers, and other situations on the Staff, both at home and abroad, shall not be held for more than five years, unless by reappointment under special circumstances.

Given at Our Court at Windsor, this thirty-first day of January, 1859, in the Twenty-second Year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,
STANLEY.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—APRIL 4. EAST INDIA LOAN BILL.

On the order for the third reading of this Bill, Lord STANLEY said it would be necessary to make a demand upon the House for larger borrowing powers for India than he had calculated two months ago. He entered into long and detailed explanations regarding the finances of India, the difficulties pressing upon which, he said, were of an exceptional and temporary character. He observed that the borrowing powers of the Indian Government, in India, had been very considerably diminished. This had arisen from one of three causes—namely, the actual want of capital in the country, or the absence of confidence in the stability of the Government, or the holding back of capitalists in the hope of a better investment. The last was, in his opinion, the only true solution of the question. After stating the amount of the deficiency of means of the Indian Government, he showed that this exigency did not involve a deficit of revenue to that extent. Until the arrival of more accurate information, he should mislead the House, he said, if he mentioned any specific sum that would be required. He did not propose to recommit the Bill for the purpose of enlarging the limit of the loan, or to introduce another Bill before the prorogation.

After some not particularly pertinent remarks from Mr. V. SMITH,

Mr. W. VANSITTART regretted that Lord Stanley had not proposed to the House to raise a loan of £12,000,000 at three and a-half per cent., as by that course he would have saved the Indian exchequer an annual outlay of £240,000, and need not have compromised himself or the House with regard to the imperial guarantee.

Mr. CRAWFORD condemned the recent financial operations in India. He did not view the financial condition of India with despondency; on the contrary, he looked at its revenues with confidence. The whole question resolved itself into one of expenditure.

Sir C. WOOD justified the measures resorted to in 1853 to reduce the interest of the Indian debt, and reasserted his somewhat gloomy estimate of the Indian revenue. He censured severely the financial operations of the Indian Government, sanctioned by that at home. The future prospects of the resources of India, he observed, were discouraging; there would be a deficiency of revenue in a year of peace of upwards of £6,500,000, exclusive of home charges. With so large an excess of charge, active measures must be taken for reducing the expenditure.

Mr. T. BARING was of opinion that the attempt to reduce the debt of India in 1853, which could not be permanently maintained, threw distrust upon the management of the Indian finances. These finances could be righted only by economy. He thought the refusal of an imperial guarantee of Indian loans was an unwise and uneconomical policy.

Sir G. LEWIS said the late Government had recommended no novel course in withholding a guarantee by the Imperial Exchequer, since they had simply pursued the invariable practice. The loan had not been obtained at a high rate of interest; the Four per Cent. Bonds had been issued nearly at par. It was the duty of the House to enforce upon the Executive Government that they must teach that of India the necessity of finding means of bringing the ordinary expenditure within the amount of the revenue.

Mr. BAILLIE said the expenditure in India could be reduced only by a very large reduction of the European army. It was impossible to say at present what the extent of the reduction would be.

Colonel SYKES insisted that England, being the party benefited by the possession of India, should not refuse to bear the responsibility of the loans in case of emergency.

Sir H. WILLOUGHBY observed that it was clear that, unless the military expenditure was limited, the insolvency of the Indian finances was inevitable. The best aid we could afford to those finances was by the Imperial Exchequer bearing a fairer proportion of that expenditure.

Lord STANLEY gave a few explanations, and the Bill was then read a third time and passed.

THE LATE GENERAL JACOB.—Lord Stanley has granted a pension of £150 a year each to the sisters of the late General Jacob. The pension commences from the date of General Jacob's death.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ORDER OF THE BATH.—(War-office, March 31.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to make and ordain a Special Statute of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, for appointing the Right Hon. Viscount Canning, Governor General of India, and the Right Hon. Lord Elphinstone, Governor of the Presidency of Bombay, to be extra Members of the Civil Division of the First Class, or Knights Grand Cross, of the said Most Honourable Order.

PUBLIC WORKS IN INDIA.—From a return to the House of Lords, published on Saturday, it would appear that the gross total amount of money for the construction of railroads and other public works in India, for raising which under a guarantee of interest measures have been duly taken, is £32,314,300, the rate of interest being generally 5 per cent., and in a very few cases  $\frac{1}{4}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. The portion of this enormous sum of money paid up on the 28th of February last was £20,869,016. The interest on the capital paid up to that date amounted to £1,012,085, and that on debentures to £23,188. Upon the Great Indian Peninsular line the net receipts from the opening, in 1853, to the end of June, 1858 (the latest date of returns) amounted to £99,424, and those on the East India line, from August, 1854, to the 30th of June, 1858, to £216,261.

BOOKS.

The Universal Review. No. II. William H. Allen and Co.

The April number of the "Universal" is decidedly an improvement on its predecessor. It contains, however, only one article to which we may allude in a journal exclusively devoted to Indian, or at least to oriental topics. The article in question is founded on Mr. Kaye's "Christianity in India," Mr. Marshman's "History of the Serampore Mission," and Mr. G. Norton's pamphlet on "Proselytism in India," on which last we shall have a few words to say presently. The reviewer appears to think that there is but small hope of converting the Hindoos except through the medium of secular education. He is of opinion that the upper and better informed classes must first be weaned from idolatry, before the truths of Christianity will strike a deep root. The Mahomedans he acts on one side, as deaf to human persuasion, but the Hindoos he regards as not impracticable if time and sound knowledge be allowed to play their part. Even now there is no disinclination to listen to religious disputations, but unfortunately the missionaries, though zealous and estimable men, are seldom fitted to act as apostles. They are too anxious to make a beginning, and thus are led to preach to the people before they are sufficiently familiar with the peculiar turns and idioms of the language. In consequence they are apt to expose themselves to ridicule, and to bring discredit on the sacred message of which they undertake to be the bearers. The interference of the Government is deprecated throughout the article, and a strict neutrality insisted upon as the only hope of averting suspicion from the village schools and the labours of missionaries. Much stress is laid upon the necessity of European residents leading lives in accordance with the tenets of the religion they profess, and a hope is naturally expressed that by means of good example and a liberal training the Hindoos may gradually be induced to turn from their false gods and embrace the religion of the Redeemer.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine. No. DXXII. Wm. Blackwood and Sons.

In addition to a very just and appreciative review of Mr. Kaye's excellent history of "Christianity in India," the April number of Blackwood contains a further instalment of the amusing series of papers entitled "A Cruise in Japanese Waters." From the latter article we shall make a few brief extracts, in the belief that they will tempt our readers to pass a pleasant half-hour in making themselves acquainted with the entire paper as it is given in Maga. Here, first of all, is a sketch of the Gulf of Yedo:—

The lower and nearer portions of the shores of the Gulf resemble strongly some of the most picturesque spots in our own dear islands; yet we have no gulf in Britain upon such a scale as that of Yedo. Take the fairest portion of the coast of Devonshire, and all the shores of the Isle of Wight; form with their combined beauty a gulf forty-five miles long, and varying in width from ten to thirty. In every nook and valley, as well as along every sandy bay, place pretty towns and villages; cut out all brick and plaster villas with Corinthian porticos, and introduce the neatest chalets Switzerland ever produced; strew the bright sea with quaint vessels and picturesque boats, and you will have the foreground of the picture. For background, scatter to the eastward the finest scenery our Highlands of Scotland can afford; leave the blue and purple tints untouched, as well as the pine tree and mountain ash. Far back, fifty miles off, on the western side of the Gulf, amidst masses of snowy clouds and streams of golden mist, let a lofty mountain range be seen, and at its centre rear a magnificent cone—the beautiful Fusi-hama, the "Matchless Mountain" of Japan. And then, perhaps, the reader can in some way picture to his mind's eye the beauties of the Gulf of Yedo, in the loveliness of that bright day when it first gladdened our sight.

Among the slang apostrophes of the London street boys some dozen years ago was one which, from its oddity, usually called up a smile on the most crabbed countenance. "There you go," cried the young urchins, "with your eye out and your nose in a sling." No doubt it appeared to them as the height of absurdity that anyone should carry his nose in a sling; but this prejudice merely indicated that they had not resided in Japan sufficiently long to become accustomed to that picturesque fashion:—

The morning breeze (says the cruiser) is cold and damp, the sun has not dispelled the low thin mist creeping along the surface of the bay from the lowlands to the north, and we are wearing blue clothing with comfort; yet all the boatmen are naked, with the exception of a small blue waistcloth, and another strip of material tied tight over the nose! Why do the Japanese tie up their noses? we have often asked, for one cannot but believe that there is some good reason why a naked man should voluntarily lash up his nose. Can a Japanese nose be a fractious feature? or is it that noses require to be much taken care of in Japan? or may it not be that there is some security in this precaution against inhaling malaria? We leave the question to be decided by future visitors, and content ourselves with the entry in our journal:—Mem. In Yedo it is the custom afloat to tie up the nose, and wear but few garments.

The good-humour and mirthful disposition of the Japanese appear to have conciliated the good-will of their unwelcome visitors. They really seem to be a nation of laughing philosophers. On one point only are they unphilosophical—the husbands are prone to jealousy. Owing to this absurd weakness on their part, their wives become martyrs, and generously sacrifice their vanity by blackening their teeth and destroying their eyebrows. The women, however, enjoy abundant liberty, which is apt to degenerate into licentiousness; and their indelicacy has been noticed by every writer on their manners and customs. The "social evil" is here elevated into an institution, and "the best educated and most polished women in Japan" belong to a class whose very existence is ignored in our own country. "Marriages are constantly made from amongst them; and it is the generally-received opinion amongst the Japanese men that they make the best housekeepers, and their society is not shunned by anyone, whether ladies or gentlemen."

A Letter Addressed to the Right Hon. Lord Stanley. No. II. By Lieut. Gen. John Briggs, F.R.S.

In this second letter addressed to the Secretary of State for India, General Briggs dwells on the acknowledged defects in the discipline of the late Bengal Army, which he ascribes in some degree to the paucity of European officers serving with their regiments. It appears that at the outbreak of the mutiny, of 74 lieutenant colonels only 42 were present for duty with their respective corps; of 74 majors only 40; of 519 captains only 242; of 814 lieutenants only 307; and of 370 ensigns only 192. In short, of the 1,831 European officers in the Bengal establishment 1,024 were absent on furlough or on civil and staff employment, and only 807 available for ordinary regimental duties. To the "extraordinary energy and talent displayed by the European officers of the Bengal Army" since the commencement of the late disturbances General Briggs pays a merited compliment, and justly remarks that the promptitude with which they raised and disciplined the new levies evinces the possession of military qualities of a very high order.

"Tents," from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. A Lecture delivered at the United Service Institution, by Major Godfrey Rhodes. Clowes and Sons.

After some interesting details on the early history of tents, Major Rhodes passes on to the examination of those now in use in the British army, and points out their chief defects. These are threefold:—

- 1st. The canvas of which they are made is not always of the best material.
- 2nd. The canvas and tent-ropes are not waterproof; and, owing to their absorption of moisture, the weight of the tent is increased nearly one-third, and by their combined contraction when wet, materially assist in pulling the wooden pegs out of the ground, thereby rendering the tent less secure during stormy weather. The alternate saturation and drying of the canvas and ropes must materially tend to rot them.
- 3rd. Want of an improved method in the construction of the present army tents, from the apparent inability of applying to them an efficacious and simple plan of thorough ventilation, &c., which, from the latter being very defective, together with overcrowding men into a confined space, is but too often the chief cause of those zymotic diseases—viz., fevers, diarrhoea, dysentery, and cholera—which are the greatest enemies to troops employed in active warfare.

Having clearly established and illustrated these points Major Rhodes proceeds to explain the advantages in the construction of the tents he himself has designed. As yet the Hanoverian Government alone has submitted these tents to a fair practical test, but the result thus far has been highly satisfactory. Should further experience confirm Major Rhodes' anticipations, he will be entitled to the gratitude of all dwellers in tents whose health and comfort he will so greatly have promoted.

Proselytism in India. By George Norton, M.A. Richardson Brothers.

Under the guise of a letter to Sir George Clerk, K.C.B., the late Advocate General of Madras, has most ably and succinctly examined the questions really involved in the popular clamour for the conversion of the Hindoos. The proselytising party, he says, confine themselves to three demands at the hands of Government:—

First, that Government should in no way interfere, directly or indirectly, to support the native religions or their objects. Secondly, that Government should bestow grants in aid to all seminaries inculcating the Christian religion combined with secular education in common with other seminaries. And, thirdly, that Government should allow the Holy Scriptures a place among the class books of all Government schools, with a view to rendering Christian instruction accessible to all those who may voluntarily seek it.

These demands are at first sight sufficiently plausible, but if examined minutely will be found to contain much that is objectionable and even dangerous. In the first place, the requisition that Government should abstain from all interference in support of the religion of Hindoo or Mahomedan, really implies that persons unwilling to contribute to the service of native religious institutions shall not be compelled to do so by legal or other coercive measures. Now, to almost every pagoda and mosque throughout India are attached endowments for educational and charitable purposes. Are these foundations, asks Mr. Norton, to be abandoned to embezzlement and plunder? if not, how is the property belonging to them to be protected, and its due administration secured? All citizens of a State are alike entitled to justice and protection from the Government, and, consequently, it is but right that religious and charitable endowments, of whatever denomination, should be saved from ruin and spoliation. Until very recently the Madras Government interfered actively in the collection and administration of various native religious funds, but when the Court of Directors prohibited all participation in the religious services of the natives the Government ceased to administer such funds, but, nevertheless, went on collecting them, and up to 1853—and probably up to the present moment—those accumulated funds were lying unappropriated in the Government treasury. In individuals such conduct would be stigmatised as embezzlement, and would be censured by none more severely than by those who indirectly commend it in the Government.

With respect to the specious demand that grants in aid be made to seminaries inculcating the Christian faith in the same manner as to those established for merely secular purposes, it must be observed that such a step would at once be a departure from that strict neutrality which the Government should rightly maintain in all religious matters. The third claim put forth by the proselytisers is no better founded than its predecessors, and it implies a fallacy. When they ask that the Holy Scriptures should be allowed a place among the class books of all Government schools, it might logically be inferred that at present the Bible is excluded from such schools. This, however, is not the case, as these claimants are well aware; but their real object is to render Scriptural instruction an inseparable branch of the educational system thus offered to the natives. The consequence of any attempt to accomplish that end, they may rest assured, will be simply to cause the Government schools to be entirely deserted, or frequented only by the children of hypocrites.

It is my confirmed opinion, writes Mr. Norton in conclusion, that through the general education of the people, through the further enlightenment of the higher orders, and through the effects of good government over a peaceful and loyal nation—combined with the real and scrupulous abstinence by Government from all interference, direct or indirect—and by such means and policy alone, will a way be opened for the gradual extension of the Christian faith over our Indian empire. My own experience has satisfied me that many, and I believe most, of the wealthy and educated classes of the native community listen with no repugnance to explanations of the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel; nor are they offended with those who earnestly inculcate them. They do object to the tampering with the weak minds of children, and of poor ignorant men, in order to proselyting—when under peculiar circumstances they feel any personal concern at all about them. They would repel with burning indignation any such tampering with children of their own family, or even with their dependents. They are driven wild, as well by delusive as by direct attempts by Government itself or its officers to interfere with their religious prejudices or customs. The general conversion of our Indian fellow subjects must be the work of an enormous length of time; and it can only, in my opinion, extend in proportion to the mental improvement of the people. But I should not despair of greater progress than has yet been made if religious influence was applied rather to the higher than to the lower orders—to the intelligent rather than the ignorant—and to adults who could reason, rather than to children with more sensibility than understanding.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

INDIA OFFICE,
31st March, 1859.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA
in COUNCIL re-publishes for general information, the following Notification which has been issued by the Government of India, and published in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary of the 21st February, 1859.

NOTIFICATION.

Fort William, Financial Department, 21st Feb., 1859.

No. 14.

His Excellency the Governor General of India in Council is pleased to notify for general information the financial measures which have been resolved upon, in order to provide means for carrying on the public service in the coming year 1859-60.

On the 16th of January, 1857, a five per cent. loan was opened, in supercession of the four-and-a-half per cent. loan, opened on the 30th of August, 1856, which had been found in the then state of the money market not to afford sufficient inducement to capitalists. On the 30th of April, 1857, the financial position of the Government of India was excellent. The annual deficit which had been experienced for several years, and which in 1853-54 had amounted to Rs. 211 lacs, chiefly in consequence of the great extension in late years of public works, was reduced for the year 1856-57 to the small sum of Rs. 18 lacs, and this financial restoration had been accomplished without the stoppage of those great works of material improvement of which India is so much in need. But as the Government had raised but a small amount in the way of loan, after the closing of the Five per Cent. Public Works Loan in October, 1855, the cash balances in India had fallen so low that the opening of an effectively drawing loan had become indispensable.

In May, 1857, the revolt of the Bengal native army broke out, and it became necessary by adequate measures both in India and at home, to provide the means of making those extraordinary exertions by which, under the blessing of Providence, the Indian empire has been saved, and tranquillity has been restored.

The Government at home undertook all the charges which had to be met at home, both the ordinary home charges of each year, and the extraordinary home charges which the despatch to India of a large English force, and the provision of an immense supply of the munitions of war (a vast quantity of which had been lost or destroyed), rendered necessary; and it assisted the Indian exchequer, at the moment of greatest pressure, by the remittance of a million sterling in bullion. These objects were met by the issue at home of temporary debentures to the amount of eight millions sterling. The Government of India had the task of providing for the main part of the extraordinary war charges, which of course had to be disbursed in India; and for the barrack accommodation of many thousand additional Europeans, as also for the restoration of the treasure which had been plundered; and this it had to do when nearly all the revenues of one of the local governments had been swept away.

The five per cent. loan, which would have been adequate for ordinary wants and in ordinary times, was found to be inadequate at this time of extreme pressure. Accordingly, it was necessary to induce capitalists to come to the assistance of the State, by an enhancement of the terms; and the Governor General in Council resolved to borrow at six per cent.

He was aware that this could not be done without in some degree affecting injuriously those holders of the paper of former loans who had not purchased for purposes of permanent investment; but this is the condition of all such holders of Government stock in all countries, whenever a great exigency forces upon the State the necessity of raising a large sum in a limited time. The Governor General in Council, however, was desirous to save such holders from loss, as far as that could be done consistently with the paramount object in view. Therefore, instead of simply opening a six per cent. loan, which would have brought down the price of four and five per cent. paper to a low point, he threw open the existing five per cent. loan to subscriptions, half in cash and half in four per cent. paper. This arrangement for many months answered the purpose, the market price of the paper of former loans was but little affected by the operation, and the expectations of Government were fully met by large and regular subscriptions through the medium of the then existing holders of four per cent. stock, or those who purchased of them for the express purpose of subscribing to the loan. From the opening of this conversion loan to the present time upwards of eight crores have been paid in in cash.

Latterly, however, whether from the partial exhaustion of such holders of four per cent. paper as are able and willing to convert it, or to sell it at such a price as will induce the capitalist to buy it for the purpose of conversion, or from some other cause, this conversion process has failed to afford the income which in the present temporary exigency is necessary for the public service. For many weeks past the subscriptions to the conversion loan have fallen to less than half what they were; and they have shown no prospect of improvement.

In this state of things, the Government of India, having the public service to provide for, had no choice but to adopt some change of measure by which it could hope to obtain the requisite funds before the cash balances should become exhausted. The Governor General in Council did not doubt that the rate of six per cent., which Government were paying, was ample interest to induce the capitalist to subscribe. But it was apparent that from some cause or other, the requisite funds, even at that rate, could no longer be procured exclusively through the medium of holders of four per cent. stock. There was therefore nothing to be done but to look for subscriptions either through the medium of some other class, or from capitalists generally.

In this state of things the Governor General in Council resolved on the 26th January last, to adopt a new arrangement in respect to the open loan, from the commencement of the approaching financial year. Accordingly he gave notice of the closing on the 30th of April next of the four per cent. conversion arrangement. By this warning all remaining holders of that stock for whose benefit it may be to take advantage of that arrangement, will still have full opportunity of so doing. Up to the end of the current commercial year, holders of four per cent. paper will still have it in their power, on subscribing to the open loan, to obtain six per cent. for the cash subscribed.

In order to throw open the door in some manner to the general capitalist, Treasury bills, bearing a somewhat lower rate of interest, were issued; and the Governor General in Council, looking to the very large extraordinary expenditure which must still remain to be incurred in the coming year, made application to the right hon. the Secretary of State for India for assistance in the way of bullion remittances from home, to the extent of three millions sterling.

It had been the wish of the Governor General in Council to await the answer of the Secretary of State, which may be expected by the 1st of May; as also to allow time to show practically what may be expected as the result of the above-mentioned measures, before determining upon the course to be adopted on the 1st of May for the service of the coming year. By the late fluctuations in the stock market, though the manifest result of an unfounded and happily short-lived panic, and the representations of the mercantile community, who are of opinion that in the present state of the market uncertainty as to the future financial operations of Government would be a great evil, have induced His Excellency in Council to anticipate the determination of this question, and to announce at once the arrangement which it is his intention to make in India for the service of the year 1859-60.

Reductions in the present enormous war charges will be made as early and to as great an extent as may be safe. Measures will be taken for the permanent increase of the Indian revenues as largely as may be consistent with sound policy. But the full benefit of these operations will not be felt in 1859-60.

The Governor General in Council hereby announces that the amount of money for which he will look to the Indian market to be raised by loan in order to provide for the service of 1859-60, is five crores of rupees. When this amount shall have been realised, the loan of 1859-60 will be closed, and no further loan will be opened in India during that year.

In pursuance of the principle adopted on the 20th of July, 1857, the loan to be opened on the 1st May next will be a five and a-half per cent. loan, to which subscriptions will be receivable in cash, or half in cash, and half in five per cent. paper.

If this loan should not produce the required amount, the Governor General in Council will recommend to the right honourable the Secretary of State that the deficiency should be supplied from England. No loan carrying a higher rate of interest will be opened in India in the course of the year 1859-60, unless under instructions from the Home Government.

The issue of Treasury bills, on the terms notified on the 26th of January, 1859, will be closed on the 30th of April; a new issue of Treasury bills will be notified from the 1st of May, bearing interest at the rate of two and a-half per centum per diem.

The sum which may be received upon these notes will not be counted as a part of the five crores which the Government desire to raise by loan.

Published by order of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council,

THE object of the NORTHFLEET DOCKS AND LONDON QUAYS COMPANY, LIMITED, is to provide the Port of London with the following, among other, important advantages:—

DRY DOCKS capable of receiving Ships of the largest magnitude, which at present cannot be accommodated in any Dock in the Thames.

INCREASED WET DOCK ACCOMMODATION, the want of which compels steamers and other vessels, especially those of the larger class, to avoid the Port of London.

DIRECT COMMUNICATION WITH EXISTING RAILWAYS, thereby securing to Merchants and Shippers the direct conveyance of imports and exports to and from any part of Great Britain without the delay and expense of cartage, wharfage, and lighterage in transit.

PLANS AND ESTIMATES of the whole undertaking have been carefully prepared, and have been investigated by a Committee appointed for that purpose. The Reports of the Engineers show a sum of £2,000,000 will be sufficient to carry out the undertaking in its integrity, leaving an ample margin for the purchase of the properties; and the Engineers have named to the Directors eminent Contractors, who are willing to take and guarantee the execution of all the works within the estimates. It is intended, however, to construct the Works at Northfleet, by gradual operations, according to the requirements of Commerce, and it is not expected that more than £1,250,000 will be called up within the first eighteen months; no call to exceed £2. 10s. per share.

IMMEDIATE REVENUE.—An unusual feature in this enterprise is that an immediate revenue will accrue to the Company from the business carried on at the Quays and Warehouses in London, and the operations of the existing Dry Dock and Engineering Plant and Machinery at Northfleet, as well as from the sale of chalk and flints, which will enable the Company, during the construction of the Works, to declare a dividend upon the Calls as paid up.

PROSPECTIVE REVENUE.—The important commercial advantages to be derived from the several objects which the undertaking comprehends, and the comparatively small outlay required, lead the Directors to expect, under a system of low charges, returns of no ordinary profit.

In the event of the Directors not deeming it advisable to proceed, the deposit will be returned to the Shareholders, less the Preliminary Expenses, which will not under any circumstances exceed Five Shillings per Share.

Applications for Shares to be made to the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company; to the Brokers, Messrs. Hill, Fawcett, and Hill, 29, Threadneedle-street, London; also to John B. Neilson, Esq., Liverpool; William Mewburn, Esq., Manchester; Nathaniel Lea, Esq., Birmingham; Thomas Parkinson, Esq., and Harry Hughlings, Esq., Halifax; Messrs. McEwan and Auld, Glasgow; William Bell, Esq., Edinburgh; John Dubedat, Esq., Dublin, from all of whom Detailed Prospectuses and forms of Application for Shares may be obtained.

JEREMIE'S SEDATIVE SOLUTION

(The Recipe of which has recently become the property of Messrs. SAVORY and MOORE) has long been celebrated in India as an invaluable ANTI-CHOLERAIC and ANTI-SPASMODIC MEDICINE.

Official Reports of Military Medical Officers, and private ones from Civilians of the highest rank, afford abundant proof of the importance with which it is still regarded in that country.

During the recent visitations of Cholera to the United Kingdom, JEREMIE'S OPIATE acquired considerable popularity as affording speedy relief in the early stages of the disease, and effectually arresting its progress. In all cases where the use of a sedative is indicated, JEREMIE'S SOLUTION may be safely and advantageously administered. The fact that its exhibition is not followed by those distressing symptoms which more or less characterise other preparations of Opium, warrants the preference which is accorded to it by so large a number of the Medical Profession.

Copy of a letter addressed to Messrs. SAVORY and MOORE by the lady of an eminent official personage in India, during the last outbreak of Cholera:—

"Be so good as to send me six bottles of your JEREMIE'S DROPS. I wish to promote the use of this Medicine at these times, because my own personal experience of it gives me such unlimited confidence in its success. I am told by the doctors now, that sulphuric acid is the great remedy for Cholera; I am not acquainted with this remedy, but the JEREMIE'S DROPS I used every day during a period of ten years in Calcutta, and every one knows that the form of Cholera in Bengal is very deadly. I have given it alike to all patients, whether European or Native, and as I had an establishment of my own of sixty-three male servants, and distributed to them and to all their families, as well as to all the poor around, my experience has been large. During this whole period of ten years I only lost one patient, a poor Native, who bathed in my tank after being seized with cholera. One varies the dose of from five to forty drops, according to the strength of the disease. The chief care is to repeat it in small doses after each purging or vomiting. After cramp and collapse have come on, I have recovered my patient by a forty-drop dose. I have always seen this remedy used by the first medical men in Calcutta. I also used mustard poultices largely to calves of legs, soles of feet, and stomach."

N.B.—A compound of a deleterious character is imposed upon the public as JEREMIE'S SOLUTION OF OPIUM, by means of falsified labels, wrappers, and bottles. Purchasers are therefore cautioned that the Government Stamp on every genuine bottle contains the names and address of the proprietors, Extract from a Letter recently received from New Zealand.

"Auckland, N.Z., Nov. 19, 1858.

"A lady to whom I gave some of your invaluable Cough Lozenges, and likewise several members of her family, who were troubled with severe coughs and colds (especially the youngest child, who had a hard croupy cough) have experienced great relief, and speak of them in the highest terms. One of my own children, too, who was troubled in like manner, has taken them with the greatest advantage. On account of their pleasant taste, children will readily take them, when they will not take other medicines. I may add that the lady above referred to informed me that she had frequently purchased them, when residing in India, of Messrs. Treacher and Co., Bombay."

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS

is allowed, by upwards of 200 Medical Gentlemen, to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided; a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body, two inches below the hips, being sent to the Manufacturer.

BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, New

Road, London.—MORISON'S VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE is the only medicine that strikes at the root of all disease. This has been proved by an experience of thirty years, during which time upwards of 400,000 cases of cure have been effected. The Hygienic agents throughout the world are unanimous on the Hygienic system of medicine introduced by James Morison, the Hygienist, who not only taught the public how to cure their own ailments, but also rescued the world from the dangers of false medical doctrines. The monument lately raised to his memory, by a penny subscription, sufficiently attests the importance of his discoveries.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

Ulcerations of the lower limbs yield with surprising rapidity to this Ointment. Abscesses, and sores of this class, that had discharged virulent and offensive matter for many years, and kept the sufferers in constant pain and in a most debilitated condition, have been cured by it in a few weeks. This Ointment does not merely and at once suppress the discharge, which would be highly dangerous, but striking through the surface to the core of the disorder it obliterates both its source and its symptoms. These valuable PILLS, by their mild aperient action, purify the blood, diminish fever, and expedite the cure, which is always permanent and safe, because these remedies have expelled all unhealthy matters.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS

PATENT.—Newly-invented and Patented application of chemically prepared WHITE and GUM-COLOURED INDIA-RUBBER in the construction of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES.

Mr. EPHRAIM MOSELY, Surgeon-Dentist, No. 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, sole Inventor and Patentee.

A new, original, and invaluable invention, consisting in the adaptation, with the most absolute perfection and success, of chemically prepared White and Gum-coloured India-rubber, as a lining to the ordinary gold or bone frame. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted in a few of their most prominent features.

All sharp edges are avoided; no springs, wires, or fastenings, are required; a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity, hitherto wholly unobtainable, and a fit, perfected with the most unerring accuracy, is secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose, or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums.

The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the chemically prepared India-rubber, and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may with thorough comfort be imbibed and retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being, at the same time, wholly provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

To be obtained only at 9, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, London; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This publication stands on quite a different ground from the other monthlies, and affects no rivalry with them. We beg to add our own recommendation to those it has already received. Though the conductors disclaim the idea of filling any vacuum, they certainly do so. They evidently also possess good information, and deal with most of their topics in a serious and searching spirit.—Press, March 5, 1859.

If it proves to be, what from the first number seems likely, a publication appealing more to the higher class of readers, whose wants are at present only supplied by the Quarterly Reviews, its chances of success will certainly be very considerable. There is no conceivable reason why articles written by and addressed to thoughtful men should only make their appearance four times in the twelvemonth, but, on the contrary, every reason to suppose that a monthly collection of such would meet with a ready and extensive sale. The purely political articles are on "Indian Finance" and "Parliament and the People," the last, especially, very ably written.—Globe, March 2, 1859.

First of all, let us bid welcome to the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," published by Messrs. Allen and Co., of 7, Leadenhall-street. It is sought to establish a sort of English "Revue des deux Mondes." This design is strictly carried out.—Literary Gazette, March 5, 1859.

Its articles, which are of a thoroughly miscellaneous character, are promising enough.—John Bull, March 5, 1859.

It is a new monthly magazine, that brings itself modestly into the world without any flaming announcement of the wonders it intends to do. . . . We are very glad to see in the first number a quality which gives it a full title to existence, viz., good sense, as opposed to the ordinary affectation of omniscience, superciliousness, or an unflagging vis comica. . . . We welcome any novelty in literature which promises to be sensible, well-informed, and gentlemanlike. There are several articles of merit in this number. That on "Literature and Life" is perhaps the best. Its remarks on Mr. B. Hope's notion of making literature a profession are perfectly sound. The very clever and much-wanted article against the silliness of our present Christmas pieces for the stage should be read by all who fancy they like going to see such things. The article on "Parliamentary Reform" we have had occasion to notice elsewhere; that on "Indian Finance" deserves attention; and that on "Hallam" is sure to get it without deserving it so much.—Spectator, March 5, 1859.

The first number of a new monthly publication, the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW," deserves a cordial welcome. Professedly based upon the plan of the "Revue des deux Mondes," it exhibits much of the scholarly spirit, the freedom and independence of thought, and the thorough geniality of tone, which mark its distinguished prototype. The opening article on "Literature and Life" is remarkable, hitting the case to a nicety, taking the middle course between the reckless Mohockism of Bohemia, and the affected kid-glove refinement of the Saturday Review. All the articles are excellent; but I would specially point out a well-deserved attack on "Christmas Pieces," a biographical notice of "Hallam," and a review of Owen Meredith's "Wanderer."—Literary Lounger in the Illustrated Times, March 5, 1859.

The best brief notion we can give of the publication is to say that it promises to become to the English reader what the Revue des deux Mondes is to the French, with an indefinitely wider latitude of topics and freedom of opinion. The soundness of its judgment on the question of Parliamentary Reform is displayed in the ablest and most thoroughly constitutional article that has yet appeared in any of our periodicals on the subject—an article which acquires additional value from the fact that it foreshadowed the whole of the scheme of the Government two days before the Reform Bill was brought forward. Let us have at least one English periodical, written with integrity and good taste, to which we may confidently look for fearless and honest opinions. The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" promises to realise those expectations, and we heartily wish it the success which it deserves.—Home News, March 3, 1859.

It may with truth be said of it (the "UNIVERSAL REVIEW"), that the opening number promises well. There is a good healthy, manly tone about it (no small thing), and literary ability of no common order. We heartily wish it success.—Overland Mail, March 3, 1859.

The "UNIVERSAL REVIEW" seems to combine, in an eminent degree, the amusement of the monthlies and the grave literature of the quarterly reviews. We regret that we cannot devote more space to the work, for we could not praise it more than its merits deserve.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette.

The papers are well written.—Patriot.

All the articles are written in an unaffected, free, and genuine style, on subjects of general current interest, not of common-place material. The article on "Henry Hallam" is made truly interesting.—National Standard.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF WROUGHT IRON BRIDGES:

Embracing the practical application of the principles of Mechanics to Wrought-iron Girder Work. By J. H. LATHAM, M.A., Civil Engineer, Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge.

The following are Extracts so selected as to give the reader, as briefly as possible, a fair notion of the book.

Athenæum, Jan. 8, 1859.

The great defect of all works and treatises on engineering is that they are too theoretical: the great merit of Mr. Latham's book is that it deals more with practice than theory. . . . The present publication, which abounds in practical investigations into girder-work in all its bearings, will be welcomed as one of the most valuable contributions yet made to this important branch of engineering.

Civil Engineer's and Architect's Journal, Feb., 1859.

We would give our warmest commendation to the very practical manner in which the author treats of joints: his aim in this matter, which has been most successfully attained, is thus stated: "My object has been, not to make the reader acquainted with a few empirical forms of joint, but to guide him through all the ordinary resources available for riveted joints, to skill in judging of their respective advantages." . . . The rules are so clearly explained, and in a form so readily applicable to every requirement of shape or position, that they cannot but be of the greatest assistance to both engineers and architects in all designs of this nature (viz., iron roofing). The arithmetical computations . . . are open to any one who will have the patience to master them, even though he have no technical knowledge of mathematics. . . . We cannot part with our Author without offering him our best thanks for the really valuable practical book which he has given to the world.

Derby Mercury, Dec. 22, 1858.

A very valuable and interesting work. . . . The practical and scientific man will be able to judge of its importance when we say that the promises held out in the preface are fulfilled in the most painstaking, clear, and accurate manner.

Mechanic's Magazine, Jan. 28, 1859.

Mr. Latham, the author of this work, has had advantages which hitherto have not often been possessed by the same individual. . . . It is undeniable that very few of our engineers have possessed, or even now possess, any considerable knowledge of abstract science. For this they have had to depend almost exclusively on others. . . . Only readers who have mastered a moderate amount of mathematics will be able to read the whole of Mr. Latham's book, but it will amply repay the perusal of those who can read it. . . . It contains invaluable investigations and information respecting bridges and bridge-work, and no cultivated engineer should attempt to do without it.

Practical Mechanic's Journal, March, 1859.

The subject which the author has chosen was never either so thoroughly analysed or so well considered, both in its analysis and its entirety, as in the volume now before us. . . . Mr. Latham has succeeded in producing a book which, while it meets the views of lofty theorists, also answers as a standard text-book for the directly practical man.

 Perfect ARTICULATION and MASTICATION, without the impediments usually attendant upon the ordinary plans.

In their IMPROVED MINERAL TEETH and FLEXIBLE GUMS there are no springs or wires, no extraction of roots; the fit is of the most unerring accuracy, while, from the flexibility of the agent employed, pressure upon the gums or remaining teeth is entirely avoided. It is permanent, wears some, and congenial to the mouth, and, when in use, defies the notice of the closest observer. It is only necessary to see them to be convinced of their superiority; and unless every satisfaction is given, no fee is accepted.

The best materials are used, which Messrs. GABRIEL are enabled to supply at prices lower than are usually charged for common qualities, they having on the premises extensive laboratories for the manufacture of every speciality appertaining to the profession. Consultation gratis. Established 1804; and at 134, Duke-street, Liverpool.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Calcutta Mail of the 8th March fully confirms the intelligence received by the last mail from Bombay. The Begum is said to be endeavouring to negotiate with Jung Bahadoor for an asylum in the Nepal territories, but we cannot imagine that, as a woman, she has anything to apprehend from the British Government.

The Nana is still hiding himself somewhere near the Gorruckpore Passes, nor is anything known of the exact locality honoured by the presence of Tantia Topce and Feroze Shah. Eight flying columns, however, are in close pursuit of the last mentioned fugitives, whose movements are now unimpeded by a crowd of adherents.

The trial of the Nawab of Farruckabad, which commenced on the 15th February, was still dragging its slow length along. The Nawab, who is defended by an English attorney, Mr. Carruthers, assisted by two natives and an interpreter, is accused of being an instigator and leader in the rebellion, and of taking a direct part in the murder of numerous British subjects, namely:—"On a sand bank on the Ganges, where upwards of forty Europeans, chiefly ladies and children, were murdered. On the Futtehghurh parade ground in July, 1857, when upwards of twenty European ladies and children, and native Christians were destroyed. In the cases of Kalay Khan, a loyal sepoy of the 10th N.I., and two loyal Sikhs, detected by the Nawab's police in carrying English letters from Cawnpore to Agra." Should these charges be proved we presume that the criminal will be presented with an estate and a dress of honour, accompanied by a complimentary address in the name of the Governor General.

The financial crisis continues, though the money market is described as "easy." The native bankers and capitalists stand aloof, and refuse to listen to the voice of the charmer.

The progress of pacification is illustrated by an official notification to the effect that Nagode and Rewah are now safe for the residence of ladies, and their usual accompaniments in India, young children.

Her Majesty, in recognition of the restoration of order and tranquillity throughout her Indian Empire, has been pleased to appoint the first of May for a day of national thanksgiving to the God of Battles. As May-day happens to fall this year on the Sabbath, there will be no interruption of business or interference with the "vested rights" and ancient pastimes of the chimney-sweeping fraternity.

The elevation of Mr. Barnes Peacock to the Chief Justiceship of Bengal creates a vacancy in the Calcutta Council, which will not at present be filled up by a member of the legal profession. Mr. James Wilson, formerly editor of the Economist, and Secretary to the Treasury under the late Administration, is mentioned as the Financial Commissioner chosen by Lord Derby's Government to investigate the entangled skein of Indian Finance. The selection is creditable to all parties, and likely to be most advantageous to public interests.

Sir Henry Rawlinson is about to proceed to Teheran as Minister at the Persian Court. This post is far better suited to the special character of Sir Henry's attainments than a seat in the India Council.

We beg to refer our readers to the Royal Warrant on the subject of the Indian Medical Establishment; and also to the very interesting, though long-delayed despatches, describing the operations that resulted in the recovery of Gwalior, and the restoration of Scindiah to regal power.

The news from China is confined to the simple fact that Lord Elgin did not accompany the expedition up the Canton river. His Excellency proceeded in the Furious to Hainan, with the intention of inspecting the new port of Kiung-chow, but owing to the inaccuracy of the charts the Furious failed to make the port, and returned to Hong Kong.

OUDE.

All is quiet in Oude.

The force under Brigadier Horsford recrossed the Nepal frontier and encamped on the Raptee. A portion of the troops has subsequently marched for summer quarters.

The rebels under the Nana and the Begum have crossed the River Gunduck, within the Nepal frontier, apparently with the intention of moving eastward.

The last returns from Lucknow show that 948 forts have been entirely destroyed, or are under process of demolition, and that 389 cannon and 1,055,889 arms of all sorts have been collected.

About 6,000 sepoys have surrendered in Oude, under the terms of her Majesty's Proclamation.

CENTRAL INDIA AND RAJPOOTANA.

It is reported that Tania Topee, under the name of Ram Singh, left the rebel camp near Bikaner, and, with ten leading men and 300 followers, joined Rajah Mann Singh at Narwar, in Scindia's territory. It is supposed that he intends making for Jaloun, in Bundelcund.

The main body of the rebels, under Feroze Shah, the Rao, and the Nawab of Kummora, were, by last accounts, making for the jungles of Bauswarra. They have been beaten back from the Jeeplee Pass, with the loss of one of their leaders, by a guard of the Mairwarra battalion. They are said to number about 3,000, including camp followers. Brigadier Somerset is in close pursuit, and overtures of surrender have been made to him on the part of some of the rebel leaders.

Three hundred rebel cavalry, under Paezoor Allee, the principal officer of Feroze Shah, surrendered at Simput on the 27th of February.

BUNDELCUND AND REWA.

A band of rebels under Fuzund Allee and Runmust Singh surprised, at Etwah, the camp of three railway engineers who were employed in surveying the Jubbulpore line. Two of them, Messrs. Evans and Limnel, were killed. The third, Mr. Campbell, escaped to Manickpore. General Whitlock has sent out three columns from Nagode against these rebels, and a fourth is in pursuit of them from Banda.

There is nothing of importance to communicate from the Punjab, North West Provinces, and Bengal.

THANKSGIVING FOR THE RESTORATION OF PEACE IN INDIA.

[FROM A SUPPLEMENT TO LAST NIGHT'S "GAZETTE."] At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 12th day of April, 1859, present the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

It is this day ordered by her Majesty in Council that his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury do prepare a form of prayer and thanksgiving to Almighty God for the constant and signal successes obtained by the troops of her Majesty, and by the whole of the forces serving in India, whereby the late sanguinary mutiny and rebellion which had broken out in that country hath been effectually suppressed, and the blessings of tranquillity, order, and peace are restored to her Majesty's subjects in the East; and it is ordered that such form of prayer and thanksgiving be used in all churches and chapels in England and Wales, and in the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, upon Sunday, the first day of May next.

And it is hereby further ordered that her Majesty's printer do forthwith print a competent number of copies of the said form of prayer and thanksgiving, in order that the same may be forthwith sent round and read in the several churches and chapels in England and Wales, and in the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed.

WM. L. BATHURST.

BENGAL.

THE DEPARTMENT OF ACCOUNT.

"Five per Cents. unsaleable at fifteen per cent. discount." That is the market report of the 15th instant, and indicates pretty clearly the result of the last financial notification. No one in his senses is likely to buy exchequer bills yielding 5½ per cent. while he can obtain five per cent. paper which will not be paid off for the next twenty years at eighty-five. These failures, failures not occasional, but recurring as regularly as a financial pressure, will, we hope, induce Lord Stanley to examine the constitution of the financial department. It is scarcely to be expected that the Governor General should be a financier, and many circumstances combine to prevent the development of that form of ability in India itself. The Department of Account is for its size the most expensive in the country, but it has never produced a Chancellor of the Exchequer. Not only have we never had a financier, a man of the calibre of Montague or Disraeli, but we have never obtained even that decorous ability which can manage the ordinary transactions of the loan market. Of late years we have had a series of blunders unrelieved by a single gleam of success. The conversion failed totally, partly from a blunder in simple addition. The Public Works loan shook public credit, and every loan since has been more or less a muddle. Matters have gone so far that at last the milch cow ceases to yield, and money at any rate seems unprocurable.

We said the department was expensive, and subjoin a list of its allowances:—

The department, therefore, is paid very considerably more than the British Cabinet, even when comprising its full complement of thirteen members. Not one of these gentlemen, the financial secretary excepted, has anything more to do than the head clerk of an ordinary banking house. Not one of them is called upon to initiate new schemes of finance, obtain loans, or act in any way as a finance minister. The Accountants general of the smaller Presidencies are the most responsible, but even their work is work of routine. All initiation, all operations are confined of necessity to the central Government, that is, to the Governor General and the financial secretary. The other offices would be infinitely better filled by trained clerks from the imperial treasury. At present they simply absorb able men who might be much better employed. The accountants are very often the pick of the services. Many of them—notably two in Bengal and one in Bombay, are considered by other officials as equal to any employment. Yet they are set aside to do work, which is simply banking business, and banking business confined to the single department of accounts. The work is not badly, though somewhat tardily, done, but it is accomplished at a most unreasonable and unnecessary expense. Even in that work much might be accomplished had we original men. We have at this moment thirteen millions sterling somewhere in India belonging to the State, and there is not sufficient accountant skill to bring the thirteenth part of it to Calcutta. We are quoting facts published in the official Gazette, in the shape first of a quarterly list of balances, secondly of a notification offering 5½ per cent. for money. The only improvement effected within our recollection, the concentration of revenue in Bengal by bills instead of treasure-guards, was effected by a secretary who had nothing to do with the matter, and who carried his point in the teeth of the Treasury. Surely it is time this state of things came to an end. If the ability exists in India let us find it. If not let us indent upon England.

It is not, however, to the reform of the department that we desire to call Lord Stanley's attention. It is to the absolute necessity of sending to India a financier of the first class. This financial difficulty will swamp us all yet. We are throwing away millions into a bottomless gulf of incapacity. The empire is in the position of those men one so often sees in society—men who, with large means and moderate habits, still contrive, by mere want of firmness and business, to remain permanently insolvent. There is no such skill to be found in India. The country, except among natives, does not produce it. If we quoted the civil service, there are not above two men—one being Mr. Anderson—to whom any one acquainted with facts would appeal for aid. No one has the smallest training in anything beyond routine—no one that opportunity of study which sometimes, as in the case of Mr. James Wilson, produces financiers without training. If the instinctive faculty exists, it is buried by the long habit of a bad routine. We want a first class financier, and can afford to pay him. A reduction of twenty per cent. on the department would provide him a noble salary; but he would be cheap at the salary of a Governor-General. We have lost already something like one and a half per cent. on ten millions, and shall lose yet more. Or if expense in such a matter is an object, the path is open to effect the end without an outlay of a farthing.

Under the Act of 1853 the Fourth Member of Council need not be a barrister. Mr. Peacock has outstayed his term by years, and his successor may legally be a man familiar with finance. There are plenty of lawyers in Government service. Such an appointment would have the advantage of being in accordance with routine. Nobody would be disturbed. No power would be set up antagonistic to Government. The advice necessary would be given from within the administration itself, and the Government have the full credit of its own reforms. There must be plenty of men procurable for two years. Mr. Gladstone, for example, would be far more nearly in his place than as Lord High Commissioner of some 250,000 Greeks. We do not presume to enter into details; but if some remedy be not found, and that speedily, an appeal to Parliament to tax Englishmen for our benefit will become unavoidable.

The future of the Empire depends on the finance of to-day.—Friend of India.

OUDE MILITARY POLICE.

A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette gives the following lucid exposition of the Military Police system introduced into Oude by the late Chief Commissioner, Mr. Montgomery:—

In the first place Oude is divided into four divisions, the head quarters of which are Lucknow, Sultanpore, Baraitch, and Seetapore. In every division there are three districts, and the following is a correct list of their head quarters.

Lucknow division contains Oonao, Roy, Bareilly and Lucknow.

Sultanpore division contains Sultanpore, Pertabghur and Fyzabad.

Baraitch division contains Gonda, Kheeree and Baraitch.

Seetapore division contains Hurdui, Durriahad and Seetapore.

At the head quarters of each division an European officer remains as commandant of the police in that division. He also has another officer subordinate to him, acting as his divisional adjutant. At the head quarters of every district there is an officer commanding that district, with another European officer subordinate to him, acting as his district adjutant.

When the head quarters of a district are in the same station as the head quarters of a division, the district commandant acts also as divisional second in command, in addition to his other duties, and has no officer subordinate to him in the capacity of district adjutant, but does all the district work himself. At present there are many officers doing duty in the Oude police who are attached to head quarters in order to assist the divisional second in command, but if hereafter there are to be no officers "doing duty," he will have to do all the work himself, which will make that post a very onerous one.

The Oude police force consists of cavalry and infantry. The former are employed in detachments all over the country, partly protective, in acting as patrols and escorts, and partly also in apprehending and bringing to justice all thieves and murderers. The infantry are employed in the former duty only, though sometimes they may be called to strengthen or support the cavalry in the latter.

In every district there are so many tehseels, and connected with every tehseel there are so many thannahs. All of these posts are commanded by native officers.

The duty of the police in cases of robberies, murders, &c., &c., is to collect the evidence and prepare cases for submission to the magisterial authorities. They keep a daily correspondence with their district officer, who, by that means, knows all that is going on in his district. The district commandant also corresponds, by means of a daily diary, with the divisional commandant, who, in his turn, sends a weekly statement of the state of affairs in his division to the chief of police, for submission to the chief commissioner.

The district commandant writes three copies of his daily diary, one for the divisional commandant, one for the chief of police, and one for the deputy commissioner, and so the system is carried on, and thus a perpetual communication is kept up between the smallest thannah in Oude, with Major Bruce, C.B., the superintendent of the police force. That officer consequently hears every day any thing and everything of importance from the whole of Oude, and is thus able to report the state of the country to the chief commissioner daily. There is only one hindrance, I have heard, in the way of the well-working of the system. Obstacles are thrown in the way by a few of the civil staff (as they are termed), who disapprove of the system, and consequently do not work with the police officers with that willingness which they might otherwise do, and which would improve the system to a great extent. There are some who dislike it, and consequently do not give their assistance which is so much needed to make it work well and satisfactorily. Their reason for disapproving of the executive police, I have not yet heard, nor have I any idea what it can be. It works exceedingly well, I believe, and is approved by all parties in Scinde, and I see no reason why in Oude, where the police has been established, and is now working on the same system, it should not also meet with satisfaction. As a man who is disinterested in the service, I believe the police force is an excellent establishment, is based on good plans, is carried on very satisfactorily, and altogether is indispensable for the pacification and good government of an Indian province. I have heard that the force is in good hands, and that Major Bruce, in concert with the chief commissioner, has got the system into good working order.

About the pay of the officers, of which so much has been said, I have only to say that whatever they receive I believe they richly deserve. Each officer who commands a district or division, &c., &c., in fact every officer in the police, in addition to his work as a police officer, has the sole command of a regiment, which alone is enough to occupy a deal of time. They are usually in charge of that regiment, either infantry or cavalry, which is scattered over the district or division to which they belong. A regiment, scattered in small bodies, must naturally be the cause of greater work and trouble than a regiment with its full complement of officers and men at head quarters. Let those who complain of the pay of the Oude police officers go and do the work of the said officers, and then, I think, many will cry out for a further increase. There are many disadvantages to strive against, many troubles to endure, very hard work to perform; therefore, I think, we cannot grudge a few rupees to those who are keeping our country quiet for us, and preserving us from evils such as murders, robberies, &c., which, but for them, might otherwise occur.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FAREWELL ADDRESS TO SIR JOHN LAWRENCE.—

The European residents at Meean Meer and Anarkullee met at the Residency at Lahore on the 18th February to do honour to the delivery of an address to the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab on his departure for England. The address, which was signed by 282 members of the civil service, 474 military, naval, and medical officers, 15 clergymen and missionaries, and 83 gentlemen not connected with the Government, was presented by the Financial commissioner, Mr. McLeod, who made, at the same time, an able and complimentary speech. The address was still more eulogistic; but its length renders its insertion impracticable. Sir John replied to it in the following words:—

"Gentlemen,—I thank you from my heart for the genial and kindly terms in which you have acknowledged my humble services in the Punjab. While fully sensible of the advantages which an officer in my position must derive by securing the goodwill of his fellow-labourers, I have endeavoured, in the course of my administration, to be guided by still higher considerations. It is, therefore, peculiarly gratifying to me to find that my policy in this respect has not prevented my gaining your sympathy and regard. The compliment which I have this day received from so many, who, by personal knowledge and daily experience, are well able to form a correct judgment on the subject, affords me the highest gratification. I have long felt that in India of all countries, the great object of the Government should be to secure the services of able, zealous, and high-principled officials. Almost any system of administration, with such instruments, will work well; without such officers the best laws and regulations soon degenerate into empty forms. These being my convictions, I have striven, to the best of my ability, and with all the power which my position and personal influence could command, to bring forward such men. Of the many officers who have served in the Punjab, and who owe their present position, directly or indirectly, to my support, I can honestly affirm that I know not one who has not been chosen as the fittest person available for the post he occupies. In no one instance have I been guided in my choice by personal considerations, or by the claims of patronage. If my administration, then, of the Punjab is deserving of encomium it is mainly on this account, and assuredly in thus acting I have reaped a rich reward. When the great mass of the native army in Hindoostan first gave signs of its intention to mutiny—when disaffection spread from station to station, until almost all the Hindoostanee troops in the Punjab became infected, and only waited the opportunity for rising in revolt—I had to look with anxious eye for the means of maintaining British supremacy in the Punjab. In the quality of the civil and military officers under my control—in the excellence of the Punjab force which had been raised, trained, and disciplined under the civil government—in the general loyalty of the chiefs and people, as much as in the valour of our British troops, did I find the means of securing the public tranquillity here, and of rendering assistance in Hindoostan. The Punjab, which had often been thought a source of weakness and danger, then was found to be a tower of strength to the empire. In every part of the province, from Peshawur to the banks of the Jumna, was found a body of civil officers, who proved themselves equal to the crisis in which they were placed. Not a single officer left his post. In remote districts the officers held their ground, supported by a few policemen, among a generally contented and well-disposed population. The duties of the administration were almost as well carried on as in times of profound peace. To the discipline, endurance, and valour of the old Punjab force, the British Government owe a lasting debt of gratitude. Admirably officered and commanded, trained for upwards of eight years in the severe and incessant duties of guarding the wildest border in the British dominions in Asia, inured to constant warfare against powerful and warlike mountain tribes, the services of these troops have proved most important. While a portion of the force still maintained its guard of the frontier, a large body were marched away the moment mutiny broke out, some to assist in overawing the disaffected Hindoostanee soldiers in the Punjab, but the greater portion to share with our gallant countrymen the dangers and honours of the war in Hindoostan. The new troops which the necessities of the times compelled me to raise in large numbers, have, without exception, behaved well, and many corps in the field have emulated the gallantry and hardihood of the old regiments. Further, I thank the officers and men of the British regiments serving in the Punjab for the valour and endurance which they evinced during the terrible struggle. Their deeds, indeed, need no words of mine to chronicle their imperishable fame. From the time that the English regiments cantoned in the Simlah hills marched for Delhi in the burning month of May, 1857, exposure to the climate, disease and death under every form in the field, were their daily lot. Great as were the odds with which they had to combat, the climate was a far more deadly enemy than the mutineers. In a very few weeks hundreds of brave soldiers were stricken down by fever, dysentery, and cholera. But their surviving comrades never lost their spirits; to the last they faced disease and death with the utmost fortitude. The corps which remained in the Punjab to hold the country evinced a like spirit and endurance. Few in numbers, in a strange country, and in the presence of many enemies, who only lacked the opportunity to break out, these soldiers maintained their discipline, constancy and patience. Lastly, it is with pleasure that I acknowledge how much I have been indebted to the military authorities in this province for the cordiality and consideration I have ever received at their hands. In all the arrangements which it has fallen to my lot to make for the maintenance of public security; in all matters in which we have been associated together, I have met with their zealous co-operation. Gentlemen, again thanking you for the great honour you have conferred on me, I wish you health and prosperity, and a speedy return to your native country."

KERIMPORE, 12th Feb.—This newly-created station is about forty-four miles distant from Kishnaghur, and is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Jellinghee. A few years ago and this place was the scene of river dacoities. Hundreds of ponseys, bhurs barbars, palwars &c., plying between Calcutta and the eastern districts were looted by gangs of dacoits and notorious Budmashes, who infested this part of the country. They carried on their nefarious trade with impunity, because the parties robbed frequently preferred putting up with their loss to giving information of it to the police, inasmuch as this proceeding would have resulted in their being dragged to Kishnaghur or Berhampore and there detained, harassed and perhaps fleeced by the Amlah. But I have reason to believe that crime has greatly diminished since the establishment of the subdivision. It is in charge of the joint magistrate, Mr. Ward. Kerimpoore now boasts of an Anglo-Vernacular School. The institution numbers about sixty pupils, and appears to stand high in the estimation of the local committee. The Messrs. J. and R. Watson and Co. have several indigo factories in this part of the country. Mandagore Cootie is close to the station, and Shikarpoor, Hookara, and Barramassa, are situated within a convenient distance of each other. These factories, as well as those on the other side of the Ganges (Pudma), are under the control and management of Mr. George Mac Leod, who is universally liked and respected. The European assistants in charge of cooties, the Amlah under them and the ryots who have dealings with those cooties are all satisfied with his mode of doing business. He is now the sole representative of the Watsons in the Mofussil, and is doing his best not only to uphold their prestige, but to check the petty oppressions of the Gomashtas and Lagiddars, over the ryots, and to convince the latter they will not lose, but gain by their connection with the firm. He has introduced the system of seeing the people paid in full, and taken measures to prevent the Gomashtas from deducting or rather buying a percentage. He is now taking a tour round the immense concerns entrusted to his charge, and looking at everything with his own eyes, settling the disputes with the ryots on the spot. If all managers were to emulate Mr. Macleod's system the Indian Field would have little occasion to attack the doings of the planters, and the Englishman would have little trouble in vindicating them. This part of the country, unlike the other side of the Pudma, is a grain-producing country. It produces large quantities of wheat, barley, &c., which though not equal to those of Patna, are very fair, and always command a ready sale in the local as well as Calcutta markets. The wheat is not first rate, neither Gungajallee nor doodeah, but very fair janalle. But the trade with Calcutta is greatly impeded by the Jellinghee being shut up during the best part of the year. It is a great shame that while tolls are levied by Government, nothing should be done to keep the river open. The wretched baudals should be done away with, and Cotton's plan be at once adopted. I think that plan is practicable as well as desirable, and if Government will not move in the matter, a Joint Stock Company should take it in hand.—Englishman.

THE INDIAN COMMISSARIAT.—The Friend of India pays a just and deserved compliment to the exertions of the Indian Commissariat during the campaign. With an army numbering some two hundred thousand at times, exclusive of a host of camp followers, there has not occurred one blunder, one wrong move. In an age when grumbling is popular, and every department has suffered from public discussion, the Commissariat establishment has escaped all reproach and censure. Nor are we inclined to pass over the services of those whom our contemporary distinguishes by the title of the "Irregular Commissariat." Individual officers, exercising jurisdiction over large territories, were required on their sole responsibility to supply stores to little armies broken up into brigades and divisions, and anxious each one to secure the speediest attention to its own wants. These wants were all met. The example is instanced of Mr. Horne, who was required to supply carriage and stores for "any one" indenting for them within the provinces of Benares, Allahabad, and Cawnpore. Sometimes carts were issued one hundred a day, at one time at the rate of a thousand a week. During such an emergency, and despite every difficulty which arose, the Commissariat has not failed, and deserves special recognition at the hands of the Government.

REPORT OF THE PUNJAB COMMITTEE OF THE HENRY LAWRENCE MEMORIAL FUND.—On the 1st of March, 1858, the Punjab Committee of the Henry Lawrence Memorial Fund was formed, consisting of the following gentlemen. President: R. Montgomery, Esq. Members: Sir John Lawrence, G.C.B., Brigadier General N. Chamberlain, C.B., Lieutenant Colonel Edwardes, C.B., Major J. R. Becher, Major H. B. Lumsden, Chas. Saunders, Esq., A. A. Roberts, Esq., Donald F. McLeod, Esq., Lieut. Col. Macpherson, Major E. Lake, Major C. Brown, Major R. Taylor, W. D. Arnold, Esq. Secretary: C. Hathaway, Esq. The object of the committee was to raise a fund which should be devoted to the memory of the late Sir Henry Montgomery Lawrence, K.C.B., the sum of £500 sterling being first set aside for the erection of a monument in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and the remainder to endow the Lawrence Asylum at Sunawar. With regard to the former, the committee beg to report that they have communicated with Mr. Lough, one of the most eminent sculptors of the day in England, and requested him to favour them with one or two designs, which will be submitted for approval and final selection.

The erection of the monument will be entrusted to a committee of gentlemen residing in London, who have been asked to undertake the trouble, and it is proposed that the design of the monument should be lithographed, and a copy supplied to every subscriber to the fund. With regard to the bulk of the subscriptions, the committee have much pleasure in announcing that they amount to Co.'s Rs. 44,107, besides a further sum of Rs. 3,155-12-10, resulting from discount and exchange operations, after deducting expenses of printing and advertisements, &c., thus aggregating a total of Co.'s Rs. 47,262-12-10, the whole of which has been invested in 5 per cent. Government paper. As the Government of India have taken over the Lawrence Asylum at Sunawar, and no further support from the public is required for that institution, it remains now to be determined in what way, consistent with the original measures proposed by the committee, the fund shall be appropriated. The committee would propose to establish an asylum at the Murree Hills, so that the Punjab, which acknowledges Sir Henry Lawrence as its first Governor and administrator, may have its own institution for the reception of the children of European soldiers stationed in these provinces. To assist in this object the Calcutta committee, which has raised a similar memorial fund of 64,000 rupees, headed by the munificent donation of 10,000 rupees from the Right Honourable the Governor General of India, have very liberally offered to endow the Punjab Asylum with their own fund, on certain conditions, which have been acceded to. It is therefore proposed to secure an eligible site of ground at Murree, and to erect at first a small institution, capable of holding fifty children—the plan being one which will admit of future extension and enlargement, without interfering with the harmony of the general design. To aid in the support of the Asylum it will be necessary to ask for those subscriptions of the philanthropic and benevolent which used to be devoted to the Asylum at Sunawar for many years, but which have lapsed since it has become a Government institution, and these donations will be thankfully received by the committee, and will be acknowledged in the Lahore Chronicle, if paid into the Lahore branch of the Agra Bank. It is also hoped that officers in charge of regiments stationed in the Punjab will allow of committees being again organised to collect and remit regimental subscriptions as has hitherto been the custom, and that the clergy will lend their aid in the same good work.—C. HATHAWAY, hon. sec. Meer, Feb. 28, 1859.

DELHI BANK.—A general meeting of the shareholders of this bank was held at Delhi on the 18th of February, to receive the managers' report of the usual half-yearly statements of accounts. Simultaneously with the issue of the last report in August the bank was deprived of the valuable services of its deputy manager, Mr. W. Charde, whose resignation, after acquiring a thorough knowledge of the accounts of our constituents, was most unfortunate. It was not till the 1st of December that the vacancy thus occasioned was filled, by the promotion of Mr. H. P. Healy, the agent of the Allahabad branch; nevertheless, it is gratifying to be able to report that the exertions made during the period under review have resulted in the reduction of the uncovered assets from Rs. 10,68,178-1-5, on the 30th of June, to Rs. 6,01,650-8-1 on the 31st of December, and that a proportionate increase has taken place under the head of "bonds" as will be found in the auditor's report. Several loans unacknowledged are under gradual course of liquidation, while in some instances, where the officers are in England, it is uncertain whether the bank's communications have ever found them. It is hoped that still more favourable results will be apparent at the close of the current half-year. The claims of the bank for compensation for losses sustained have had the careful attention of the managers. Estimates were prepared, and duly filed with the deputy commissioner of Lucknow, and the commissioner of Delhi respectively, in the months of August and September last; subsequently thereto schedules in detail have been submitted to the authorities. The compensation committee in Calcutta have recently applied to the Government of India, but have failed to elicit any information of its intentions, beyond the fact that a general schedule is under preparation for transmission to the Secretary of State in council, with whom the final decision of the question seems to rest. The net profits of the half-year aggregate Rs. 83,048-2-4, equal to 8-5 per cent. on the entire capital of 20 lacs; the result is satisfactory, considering that the Compensation and London and Eastern Bank accounts, amounting to nearly 4 lacs of rupees, are unproductive. The transfer of Rs. 11,762-0-6, in completion of the reserve fund to 2 lacs of rupees, will leave Rs. 71,286-1-10 at the disposal of proprietors at this meeting. Pending, however, the decision of the question of compensation above adverted to, or the recovery of a large proportion of the bank's assets, still unsecured by either bonds or acknowledgments, the managers again urge the expediency of a further postponement of dividend, as they feel assured that such self-denial must result in greater stability to the bank. The Allahabad branch of the bank is now in full operation, and affords grounds for belief that it will prove a valuable auxiliary to the parent institution in due course. The North Western Bank having withdrawn its Mussoorie branch, the managers have resolved to occupy that field also, from the 1st proximo. Referring to the 3rd resolution of the last general meeting, the managers announce that the London committee of the Indian Relief Fund have undertaken to provide for the orphan sons of the late Mr. Berresford; and in reference to the sixth resolution of that meeting, it is observed that the majority of Indian shareholders having voted in favour of the return of the head office of the bank to Delhi, it was accordingly brought back on the 1st of December last. After receiving the managers' and auditors' reports, the assembled shareholders agreed, by a majority of thirty-four votes, to postpone for a time the division of profits, and to adopt the managers' suggestions, that they shall be disposed of as follows:—

To the reserve fund (in completion of two lacs of rupees) .....	11,762	0	6
To dividend account for future division, pending the receipt of compensation or the recovery of the uncovered assets represented by the auditors .....	70,000	0	0
To current profit and loss .....	1,286	1	10

The seventh resolution of the meeting of the 20th of March, 1858, for the establishment of a branch bank at Allahabad was unanimously confirmed, and the meeting expressed their approval of the proposition to open a branch at Mussoorie. The confirmation of the second clause of this resolution will depend upon the votes of the shareholders hereafter. The business of the day concluded with a vote of thanks to the manager "for the very successful and satisfactory proceedings during the past half-year," and to the chairman, Colonel F. Gartskell, C.B.

COPPER COINAGE.—A correspondent of the Englishman accuses Government of extravagance in ordering a new copper mint at a cost of twenty lakhs of rupees. The coin, he says, could be imported ready struck from Birmingham. It could, and with advantage, but, nevertheless, there is no extravagance in setting up a copper mint. It is to cost ten lakhs, not twenty, and the seignorage will leave an ample profit on all expenses. No possible amount of machinery could keep pace with the wants of India in this matter, and importation will be as advisable when the mint has been erected as before. To give each household sixpence only in copper we should require seven hundred and twenty millions of pieces, or fifty-two years' out-turn of the present mint if devoted to copper alone. We very much doubt whether the copper coin is not even now melted down to a very large extent. We remember meeting three boat-loads in 1854 going into Mirzapore to be melted down for lotahs.—Friend of India.

RHOTOSURH.—We understand that symptoms of an approaching break up of the force hitherto concentrated on the Grand Trunk Road are apparent, the detachment of the 37th having been ordered to return to Ghazepore, and take with them the guns hitherto at Sasseram, where temporary barracks for a wing of an European regiment are to be constructed. The 77th, we suppose, will shortly proceed to their original destination, Allahabad. The 1st Bengal police battalion, better known as Rattray's Sikhs, have proceeded to Arrah. It is said that a detachment at Rhotas has been withdrawn, and as the utility of garrisoning that fort is very problematical, it is doubtful if the detachment will be replaced. Rhotas is a splendid defensive position, if the garrison were well supplied with ammunitions of war and provisions, and were sufficiently large to occupy a place accessible by forty ghauts and tracks, as beyond its strength it supplies nothing, not even a sufficiency of water. Provisions must be collected in the country round, and as provisions sufficient to stand a siege of any duration could not be collected in a few days, we are at a loss to discover the advantage of garrisoning Rhotas, whilst there is a strong post at Dheree, only two marches distant; Rhotas being proverbially unhealthy, either in consequence of the only water available there being the contents of a dirty muddy reservoir destitute of springs, and dependent on the rains for a supply of water, and which even when exposed to no other drain than that of evaporation becomes almost dry before the succeeding periodical rains fall to refill it. However, whatever may be the cause, the fact is undoubted, that out of a garrison of one hundred and fifty men almost every man was prostrated by fever, and had to be removed from its pestilential precincts. As an offensive position for a party unable to calculate on assistance from below sufficiently powerful to distract the attention of a besieging force, it is below contempt. Its very strength, which consists in its difficulty of access, puts effective sorties out of the question. We can well imagine how the prospect of a two miles' retreat, up rugged rocks and precipitous ways, would make a native force pause before it encountered the risk of a sortie, which, in the presence of a watchful foe, would be certain to eventuate in total ruin. Such being the case, we scarcely think the authorities will send men there to sicken and die without an object. It is the key of no position. A small force of the insurgents could not hold it, a large force would starve in it. In proportion to its inaccessibility would be the readiness with which it could be invested. If there are few places where a force could mount to the assault, there are equally few where a force could descend to the attack. If the place must be occupied, place a thannah there, and a thannah at Akberpore. There are no provisions at Rhotas, and without provisions it could not be held for a week, and provisions could neither be taken up nor stored at Rhotas without the cognizance of the thannadar at Akberpore, and the thannadar at Rhotas. There is a magistrate at Sasseram, and whilst any suspicion remains, he could visit the fort every fortnight, whilst the indigo planter who resides at Akberpore might be depended upon, after having been twice burnt out of house and home, to scent the storm afar and give timely notice of danger. We must confess we should be sorry to see again inaugurated that system so fatal to discipline of putting away regiments in small detachments in encampments, in spite of past experience of its injurious consequences.—Englishman.

MURDER OF THE RAILWAY SURVEYORS.—The news of Mr. Evans' death was brought into Allahabad by Mr. Colin Campbell, and a native, who were of the party. It appears that seven engineers were surveying about the village of Etawah, about forty miles north-west of Allahabad. Four of them were in the rear survey, and three were in the suite of Mr. Evans, Mr. Limmel, and Mr. Campbell. According to the native's account, the zemindar of that quarter gave Mr. Evans notice of the approach of the rebels. Mr. Evans' reply was that his guard of twenty men would protect him. The poor men were asleep in their tents, and the sepoys were cooking, when the rebels came upon them, about two o'clock of the afternoon of the 26th. Mr. Evans asked the sepoys whether they could protect the party; they replied, if the sahibs gave the word, of course they would fire upon them, but they could not say whether they could save them. Upon this, Mr. Evans and the other two got on their horses. A sowar ran Mr. Evans through the body with a spear, and he and his horse fell into a ditch, whereupon the sowar got off his horse to kill Mr. Evans, who offered him all that he had if he would save his life; but he cut off his head. Mr. Limmel was thrown from his horse and was taken prisoner by the enemy, and the last that was seen of him was—he was carrying Mr. Evans' head. The other four, as soon as they heard what had happened at the tents, hid themselves in the jungle, and ultimately saved themselves in Turrowan. Mr. Campbell, the native, and the sepoy guard, have come in to Allahabad; but, of course, we are at liberty to form opinions of the loyalty of our present sepoys from this circumstance. There is a chance that poor Mr. Limmel may yet be alive, but a very faint one. Now this has happened at a comparatively small distance from Allahabad, Cawnpore, and Futtehpore, and in presence of a (nominal) guard of sepoys.—Englishman.

DARJEELING, Feb. 26.—The weather here has changed, with high winds, hail, rain, and heavy falls of snow on the neighbouring hills. Captain Maxwell had paid a visit to inspect the new barracks at Sinchul. A native priest of Bhootan is building a temple about fifty yards from the walls of the church. Two more tea companies have been formed. The manager of one of them has been there some time. The dawks are now very regular; it is to be hoped the inspector will not upset them again. Coarse rice is selling at 3-8 per maund. The Bunnahs buy it at their own doors for 1-12 a maund, and then raise the price at every shower of rain. A new magistrate is sadly wanted to rescind many old regulations and regulate the bazaar prices. The station would then have a chance of going ahead.

BANK OF BENGAL.—The Proprietors of the Bank of Bengal have voted an annuity of £500 a year to Mr. Plumb, the retiring secretary. The bank have at the same time decided that they will grant no more pensions on any consideration whatever. The rule is a wise one, the business of the bank being to make the largest dividend obtainable for the shareholders, an object with which a dead weight of pensions would materially interfere.

A CIRCUMLOCUTION OFFICE.—The Englishman gives the following description of the mode in which notes are changed at the Bank of Bengal. The bank is, we imagine, the slowest in the world, and this note sufficiently explains the origin of the delay. Imagine the Bank of England stopping an English merchant till all these formalities had been completed:—"The usual practice, in such cases, is for the party exchanging a note to go, in the first instance, to the chircoot or slip-writer, one Brojendrololl Mitter, whose duty it is to fill in the chircoot particulars of the name of the person on whose account the note is changed, the agent by whom changed, and whether the note is to be changed for silver or other notes. The chircoot writer hands the slip to the presenter who gives it, and the note to the examiner. The duty of this man is to examine the genuineness of all notes before they are cashed. He has before him a list of stopped notes, and it is his business to compare this list with the notes presented before he passes them on for exchange. If a note presented has been stopped, he is bound to give notice at the moment to the deputy khazanchee."

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Major General Dupuis, C.B., who left Calcutta for England on the 9th Feb., before doing so issued the following order to the royal artillery serving in India:—

"His Royal Highness the General Commanding in Chief having been pleased to withdraw Major general Dupuis from the command of the royal artillery in India, the Major general cannot leave this country without expressing to the officers, the non-commissioned officers and men who have been under his command, the great pleasure and satisfaction it has afforded him to observe their gallant and excellent conduct on all occasions. Arriving in this country as they did at a great crisis, they were hastily equipped and hurried into the field, but their perseverance and energy enabled them to overcome all difficulties, and in every important action during the war their services have been conspicuous. Their discipline in camp and their kind treatment of the natives attached to them have been equally marked. The Major general leaves them with regret, but it will be his duty and pleasure to report to his Royal Highness the General Commanding in Chief on his return, that the royal artillery have maintained in India the high reputation which they had already gained in every other part of her Majesty's dominions."

PROGRESS IN CASHMERE.—We hear that the young Maharajah Runbeer Singh has recently revised the Tariff which had been of late the subject of much complaint amongst the Cashmerians. The abolition of Abkaree and the Julkar or tax on fishing, the former of which yielded a revenue of 50,000, and the latter about 40,000 rupees per annum, has given universal satisfaction. The distillation of wine and other spirituous liquors has been prohibited, and drunkenness will be punished by fines.

COVENANTED v. UNCOVENANTED.—Having heard that the superintendency of the Sulkeah Salt Golahs, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Alexander, was to be conferred upon some member of the Uncovenanted Service, we were prepared to learn that a considerable reduction in salary was also contemplated, but not to the extent now proposed, for we are informed that the handsome monthly stipend of Rs. 2,000, besides a convenient residence rent free, hitherto given to the Covenanted incumbent, will be reduced to Rs. 700, when the same work has to be done, or left undone, by the Uncovenanted servant, who, moreover, will in future have to provide himself with a house. We are glad to find on the part of Government a wholesome desire to cut down to moderate bounds such overpaid sinecures as to the charge of the Sulkeah Salt Golahs, and we would urge the necessity of at once carrying out this principle by a reduction by one-half of the salaries of all salt and opium agencies, and their immediate transfer to the Uncovenanted Civil Service, when, not only will a very important saving be effected in pay, while the work is equally well or better performed, but we confidently aver a general reduction in the charges for the administration of these departments will also follow.—Englishman.

Exports (Calcutta, March 8).—The state of the produce market has continued much about the same as last reported. In Indigo little has been done, the season being now nearly over; the few parcels offering being low up-country produce. In Rice Silk and Silk Piece Goods less business has been done. Sugar has been taken to a moderate extent. Salt has been in limited operation for Great Britain, but it has been engaged freely for Australia, the Gulf, Mauritius and Bourbon. Oil Seeds have been in moderate request. Jute has engaged good inquiry, induced by low rates of freight. Wool has been in active demand for both Europe and America. Lac Dye and hell Lac in limited operation.

Imports (Calcutta, March 8).—The market may be represented much in the same state as before. Dealers have not shown much disposition to purchase, consequent on unfavourable accounts from the Upper Provinces, reporting the accumulation of stocks at Mirzapore and Furruckabad, and sales been a rather better demand for 59 inches Grey Shirtings of middling and finer qualities, at slightly higher prices. White demand; White are in moderate request. Grey Cambrics are not in good demand for local requirement; White in steady demand, but at slightly lower price. Grey Mulls are in good request at this season; White in steady demand. Lappets in steady local demand. Wool Twist has been in better demand and price since the reduction of the large stocks in second hands, as reported in our last. Woolens are quite neglected, as usual at this season. Metals have been in steady speculative demand, but without any material change in price.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MADRAS BANK.—The Madras journals publish a report of the last meeting of the proprietors of the Madras Bank assembled to elect a director. The debate was animated, and it came out that the bank was practically ruled by three Madras firms. A party of the proprietors wished to introduce an outsider, and with amusing simplicity requested their opponents not to use their proxies. Mr. Nelson, representing the monopolists, replied with equal innocence that he must do his duty to his constituents. His nominee was declared duly elected.

COTTON CULTIVATION.—Government, on the 11th Feb., passed the following order on a letter from Mr. Montclair:—"In reference to a notice recently published, that a quantity of New Orleans cotton seed is now available for distribution to persons anxious to introduce the cultivation of it, within the limits of the Madras Presidency, Mr. Montclair solicits the appointment of a scientific commission to examine the facts and theory that he has to submit, relative to the acclimatizing of exotic cotton seed, and to the adaptation of the Indian soil to its culture. The Right Hon. the Governor in Council has accordingly resolved to appoint the undermentioned gentlemen to be a committee for the purpose of enquiring into and reporting on Mr. Montclair's views as to the method to be pursued for the successful cultivation of foreign cotton in the Presidency, viz.:—Mr. E. Maltby, Member Board of Revenue, Major Worster, Acting Government Astronomer, Dr. Mayer, Professor of Chemistry, Dr. Montgomery, Professor of Botany. A copy of Mr. Montclair's letter to the Right Hon. the Governor will be furnished to these gentlemen, and they will be pleased to place themselves in early communication with Mr. Montclair on the object of the enquiry."

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN.—The appointment of Sir Charles Trevelyan to the Governorship of Madras is a novelty, and a pleasant one, if only because it breaks the long series of fifth rate Peerings. It proves that Lord Stanley really attends, in the distribution of his patronage, to something beyond party connection or Parliamentary weight. He has gone out of his way to select an able man. Sir Charles Trevelyan, so far as he is a politician, is a Whig, selected by Whigs, promoted by Whigs, connected with Whigs. Yet he has been chosen by a Tory Administration for one of the best and most important appointments in the gift of the Crown, and one, too, hitherto somewhat carefully reserved for unknown peers, or broken down servitors of the State. The appointment will, we imagine, be received with great pleasure at Madras. Lord Harris, though a man of some reporting ability, and personally respected, has not been a successful Governor. There is little scope at Madras, under our present constitution, for anything but administrative energy, and that quality Lord Harris has not displayed. He will be remembered for a few months as the founder of some agricultural shows, and as the only Englishman who in the nineteenth century has pleaded for the permanent enslaving of the Press. He is succeeded by a man who unites in a peculiar degree European and Indian experience, who is acknowledged as one of the first of administrators, and who had stood up manfully in 1857 for the permanent freedom of the Indian press. His letter signed "Indophilus" was the most conclusive defence of a free policy which appeared. Sir Charles Trevelyan, too, has the rare fortune to be trusted by the English governing class. His word upon Madras grievances will outweigh reams from Lord Harris, and he is said to be specially intolerant of official lethargy. Business must be accelerated, or Madras exempted from the necessity of referring to the Central Administration. The appointment is one of the highest benefit to the presidency, as well as of promise for the future distribution of Indian patronage.—Friend of India.

THE TRADE OF ADEN.

Captain R. L. Playfair, first assistant political resident at Aden, has prepared a statement of the state of trade at the British settlement of Aden for the year 1857-58. The substance of the memorandum is as follows:

The province of Yemen, of which Aden is now the chief seaport, has been famous from all antiquity for the richness and fertility of its soil, the salubrity of its climate, and the number and wealth of its inhabitants. Commercial intercourse between this country and Syria existed at a period long anterior to the oldest profane historical records. The inspired writer in enumerating the glories of Tyre, says:—"Arabia, and all the Princes of Kedar, they occupied with thee in lambs, and rams, and goats; in these were thy merchants. The merchants of Sheba and Raama, they were thy merchants; they occupied in thy fairs with chief of all spices, and with all precious stones, and gold. Harran and Canneh and Eden (Aden), the merchants of Sheba, Asshur, and Chilmad were thy merchants."—Ezek. xxvii. 21 to 23.

But in addition to its aromatic gums and other rich natural productions, which supplied the markets of Egypt and Phœnicia, a vast amount of wealth flowed into the country from exterior sources. From the earliest ages up to the sixteenth century, when the Portuguese doubled the Cape of Good Hope, and were the means of directing the Indian trade to that route, its harbours, and particularly that of Aden, were the emporia of an extensive trade between the countries bordering the Mediterranean, and India, Persia, and the countries of the further east.

In ancient times the three great outlets for the produce of Yemen were Mooza, Okelis, and Aden. At the time of the Author of the Periplus of the Erythraean sea, Mooza was a mart of great trade, but since then it has been carried inland by the gradual accretion of the coast. Shortly after this era Okelis also was abandoned, and the trade of Arabia Felix, which had sunk to a very low ebb, was transferred to Aden, which became almost the sole commercial port in the country.

The discovery of the use of coffee, about the fifteenth century, gave a fresh stimulus to the town of Yemen, and to this event Mokha owes its existence. It rapidly increased in size and importance, and speedily became the great depot of the trade of Yemen, and about the beginning of the seventeenth century, the English and Dutch East India Companies established factories there, and carried on a lucrative commerce with the Indian ports. Ships from all parts of the East frequented its harbours, and Kafilas from Egypt, Syria, and even the eastern nations of Europe, flocked to its markets.

In the beginning of the eighteenth century the French established a factory at Mokha, which was then at its highest state of prosperity, and almost the only outlet for the produce of the coffee country. The English, Dutch, and French, carried on a regular trade with it, and by means of the navigation round the Cape of Good Hope, the freight of coffee was considerably reduced, and the consumption of it in Europe began proportionally to increase.

This trade continued unabated until 1839, when Aden became a British possession, and the superior qualifications of that port, under an enlightened Government, gradually withdrew the commerce of Mokha, since when it has rapidly and steadily declined. Its ruin has been, and must continue to be, in inverse ratio to the prosperity of Aden; under the most favourable circumstances two trading ports could hardly flourish in such close proximity to each other, but this becomes an impossibility; whereas, in the present case, the one has an indifferent anchorage, rapidly filling up, and when the worst features of Turkish misrule are prominent, while the other has a more favourable position, a capacious and secure harbour, and where the subject enjoys perfect civil and religious liberty. Thus the once flourishing port of Mokha has become a ruin; in the town there are not twenty houses in good repair, while two-thirds are crumbling to pieces, and deserted, and the great majority of its inhabitants have gone to Aden to seek a livelihood, which they can no longer find in their native place.

From the occupation by the British in 1839 until 1850, customs' dues were levied in Aden as in India, but it was found that the trade of the new settlement did not increase as rapidly as had been anticipated, and fell far short of the proportions which its geographical position had promised; and notwithstanding the increased protection to the persons and property of merchants frequenting the port, the inland cultivators and traders could not be induced to abandon the ancient channel by which their produce had been conveyed to the sea coast, even with the certainty of a better market in Aden.

The remedy for this evil lay in making the port free, which was done by Act X. of 1850. The result is striking. During the seven years which preceded the opening of the port, the total value of trade, including imports and exports, aggregated Rs. 1,30,95,578, that of the last year exceeding the first by Rs. 10,17,268. During the seven years' immediately after the port had been opened, the value of trade amounted to Rs. 4,21,97,937, the last year exceeding the first by Rs. 59,07,448. Thus it has been proved beyond doubt that, in a commercial point of view, Act X. of 1850 was a measure of sound policy.

In 1844-45 the value of trade was Rs. 14,90,972, in 1857-58 it amounted to Rs. 1,14,55,523, in other words, during the comparatively short space of thirteen years, it has increased eightfold, the value of this increase being almost a million sterling per annum.

The following is a summary of the trade for the official year ending 31st May, 1858.

IMPORTS:—
Goods .. ..	Rs. 47,78,677
Treasure.. ..	" 22,41,798
		70,20,475
EXPORTS:—
Goods .. ..	Rs. 28,36,374
Treasure.. ..	" 15,98,674
		44,35,048
Total .. ..	Rs. 1,14,55,523

Alkali, an impure carbonate of potash, is manufactured in large quantities in the immediate vicinity of Aden, from the salsolacious plants which everywhere abound; it is principally used in Aden, but a small quantity is exported. This item shows a decrease of Rs. 8,434 over the previous year.

Coals form by far the largest item in the column of imports, amounting to nearly one-third of the whole, excluding treasure. In this, owing to the increased steam communication with Aden, there is an advance of rupees 23,351. It is a question whether or no this item should be exhibited in the trade returns, as it is entirely used by the steamers which ply between Suez and India, Mauritius and Australia, but upon this steam communication the prospect of Aden is in a great measure dependent, and many persons obtain their livelihood in the various depots.

Coffee is an important article of trade, and it is satisfactory to observe that there has been a very large increase both in the imports and exports of this commodity, amounting to nearly six lacs of rupees. The coffee imported into Aden is principally brought from the Red Sea for exportation to Bombay, France, and America. The difference between the imports and exports, amounting to about four and a-half lacs of rupees, indicates the quantity which has reached Aden overland, direct from the coffee country. The total value of the transactions in coffee (Rs. 16,81,834) represents an amount of nearly 60,000 cwt. The best coffee comes from the neighbourhood of Andiam. The trees are cultivated in terraces on the sides of the mountains; for the most part they are watered only by the rain, but some are irrigated from cisterns built to contain rain water; the latter yield crops twice a year, but the second is seldom thoroughly ripe, and is always inferior to the first. There is no great consumption of coffee in Yemen; the natives of the country prefer a decoction of the husks, called Kishr.

Cotton is imported from India chiefly for consumption in the country—a very small portion is exported. It is cultivated to a certain extent, but not in sufficient quantities to meet the demand for it. The increase in this article during the past year is Rs. 93,303.

Ghee.—There has been a large decrease in ghee; it is difficult to account for this satisfactorily, but the actual is not so great as the apparent decrease. During the entire season of 1855-56 a great part of the Somali coast, including the part of Berawr be hence most of the ghee is obtained, was blockaded in consequence of an outrage committed upon a British expedition sent there by the Government of Bombay. The Somali traders were unable during that year to command a market for their ghee, and in the following season brought the produce of two years to Aden. Thus the exports and imports in 1857-58 must, in this instance, be considered as compared with produce of the two previous years.

A large increase is apparent in two other articles of African produce, gums and ivory, in the latter article alone amounting to Rs. 4,88,065.

Munjeet or madder, in which there is an increase of Rs. 11,381, is entirely the produce of Arabia.

There is a decided decrease in the value of piece goods. It is probable that this does not occur in British manufactures, but is owing to American vessels paying in money for the goods they receive here, instead of importing, as heretofore, cotton cloth.

The imports from Bombay, and the subordinate ports of that presidency, exhibit a decrease of Rs. 1,08,924; on the other hand, the exports to these ports have increased by Rs. 3,31,678.

The imports from, and exports to, Africa constitute a very large item in the trade of Aden, aggregating for the past year Rs. 963,496; a few remarks on this subject appear necessary.

The great outlet for the commerce of Africa is Berbera, situated due south of Aden. It is rather an encampment than a town, the inhabitants during the annual fair, or from October to April, living in huts of reeds, mats, and sticks; at other times it is deserted. Nevertheless, it has been a mart of great trade from the earliest ages; in the time of the Author of the Periplus, or shortly before the Christian era, it was styled Mosayllon, and was then much frequented by Greek and Egyptian merchants, who purchased their commodities cheaper there than in the Sabeian markets.

The annual fair is one of the most interesting sights on the coast. Tribes the most remote and diverse meet here for a short time, to be again scattered in all directions; bungalows from Muscat, Soor, Bussora, Baberain, Porebunder, Mandavia, and Bombay, meet those from Aden and the ports in the Red Sea. A perfect babel of confusion reigns, and disputes, which are settled by the spear and dagger, are of daily occurrence; but amidst all this turmoil, the traders are unmolested; each under the protection of his chosen "Abban" barter the produce of his country for the gums and valuable merchandise of Africa; none are more successful than the fat and wealthy Banians, who by their superior capital, cunning, and influence, rapidly distance all competitors.

The chief articles of trade which reach Aden from Berbera are sheep and cattle in great abundance. Indeed, this settlement is entirely supplied with meat from the African coast, ghee and coffee from the neighbourhood of Hurrur, various descriptions of grains and resins, ostrich-feathers, and ivory.

A similar trade is carried on between Aden and various other ports on the African coast, but Berbera is the principal emporium.

During the year 1857-58 the number of square-rigged sailing-vessels which visited the port, excluding steamers of all descriptions (of which, on an average, about one arrives in every two days), was 161, of the aggregate tonnage of 85,561. Of these 121 were under British colours, 12 American, 14 French, 2 Hamburg, 3 Prussian, 6 Arab, 1 Dutch, 1 Swedish, and 1 Sardinian. It will be seen that, with an unimportant decrease under the head of Swedish vessels, there has been a steady increase in the tonnage of every nation, amounting in all to 11,909 tons.

To this must be added country craft, of which 1,120 vessels, with an aggregate burden of 24,841 tons, arrived during the past year.

The foregoing comprises the exterior trade of Aden. A large quantity of Arabian produce is, in addition to this, introduced by the daily kafilas. Of this there is no very accurate return. During the past year 1,12,803 camel-loads of grain, fodder, vegetables, fruit, coffee, &c., were introduced for the supply of the market.

If we estimate the produce brought into Aden from the interior at twice the value of the merchandise taken back, which experience has proved to be considerably under the truth, the entire value of trade during the past year will be about as follows:—

Interior do. .. ..	2,14,743	46,49,791
Exterior imports .. ..	70,20,475
Interior do. .. ..	4,29,486	74,49,961

Total Rs. 1,20,99,752

Or nearly one million and a quarter sterling.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CONVERSAZIONI.—The Bombay Telegraph and Courier reports that a series of conversazioni have been commenced at the Grant College. The first was attended by the Governor, and almost all members of society in Bombay. The upper rooms of the college were brilliantly lighted, and all kinds of objects of interest, geological specimens, new photographs, microscopic objects, Japanese curiosities, &c., exhibited and explained by the professors. The experiment was considered most successful.

A STRANGE DECISION.—The senior magistrate at Bombay has recently given a most extraordinary decision. A Shastree of the translator's office was accused of issuing counterfeit coin. It was proved that the coin in which he discharged bills was light, and instruments for coining were found in his house. The magistrate decided that "the prisoner had not transgressed any of the sections of the statute, inasmuch as the coin in court—pronounced by each witness for the prosecution to be 'bad'—was found to be the genuine coin current, the only defect being that, by a process of 'sweating,' some of the coin was below the standard weight." If this be sound law, sweating coin is an honourable, as well as a profitable profession.

DOG KILLING.—Shett Vukhutchund Khoosalchund Premabhai Hemabhai, and other inhabitants of Ahmedabad petitioned Government on the 25th January last against a recent order alleged to have been issued by the police authorities of Ahmedabad for the destruction of dogs in that city,—stating that the circumstance had been a cause of deep regret and mortification to the petitioners and their co-religionists. The petitioners further mentioned that necessary measures had always been adopted by them for the removal of "rabid" and mischievous dogs; and that in consequence of their former representations, Government having been pleased to prohibit an indiscriminate destruction of these animals, the practice of killing dogs had ceased for some time past, to the great satisfaction of the people. Relying on the wording of the recent Royal Proclamation, the petitioners had hoped that Government officials would not now be permitted to interfere in any matter connected with the religion of the natives, and that the prevailing customs and usages of the country would be duly respected; and trusted that Government would prohibit the indiscriminate destruction of dogs in their city. The petition having been referred for report to the Commissioner of Police, Mr. Bettington, on the 5th March, reported that the facts had not been correctly stated in the petition. No measures of any kind had been ordered or steps taken at Ahmedabad, which have not been in force during the last four years—the statement to the contrary in the petition being without any foundation whatever. It might be inferred that the local officers had not exercised sufficient tact and precaution to avoid giving unnecessary offence; but Mr. Bettington was well aware that the contrary is the case. He had received complaints on the 4th March of the extent of the existing nuisance, and such complaints were only too well confirmed by the hydrophobia mortality returns, which show that Ahmedabad has more casualties than any district in this presidency, save Ahmednuggur. It was sufficiently evident, Mr. Bettington said, that if the dogs were removed by the petitioners they could not be killed by the police. It was somewhat remarkable that the petitioners at Ahmedabad could not understand the proclamation as well as the people of Surat, Poona, and other cities and towns; for the latter comprehended fully, that the proclamation sanctions no act under pretext of religion on the part of any section of the community, which act, whether of omission or commission, endangers the life or property of the rest of the community. The Commissioner of Police, in the concluding part of his report, suggested to Government that the petitioners should "be informed, once and for all, that the first care of Government is for human life, the security of which is not compatible with the toleration of the nuisance of stray dogs; and that stray dogs will not be allowed in any road, street, path, or bye-way at Ahmedabad, or anywhere else. Instead of standing forward as advocates and supporters of a dangerous nuisance, and the champions of animals which are not their property, the petitioners would better evince their appreciation of her Majesty's proclamation by extending to others the toleration they receive themselves; and by studiously abstaining from interference with the habits and necessities of life of other classes of the community." Resolution of Government.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council fully concurs in the views expressed by the Commissioner of Police in this letter. A copy of his report will be forwarded to the magistrate of Ahmedabad, with a request that he will summon the leading petitioners and explain the views contained in Mr. Bettington's letter to them, with an intimation of the surprise and regret with which Government has received an expression of their dissatisfaction with the humane precautions adopted by the magisterial and police authorities at Ahmedabad for the preservation of human life. —Bombay Times.

INDIGO CULTIVATION IN SCINDE.—Mr. H. B. E. Frere, Commissioner in Scinde, on the 7th Feb. last forwarded for the information of Government the returns of indigo cultivation in the Upper Scinde Collectorate during the year 1857-58, and in the Hyderabad Collectorate during the half year ending 30th April, 1858. From the statement showing the extent of indigo cultivation and manufactured in the Upper Scinde Collectorate, during the year 1857-58, it appears there are four Deputy Collectorates in this, Larkhanah, Mehur, Shikarpoor and Sukkur, and Rohree. Larkhanah is divided into four talookas, —Lubdurriah, Ruttadhera, Nusseerabad, and Kumbee, and in these the number of cultivations were four, and the extent of land cultivated was 48 beegas 11 bis; the number of vats were altogether 9; the quantity of indigo manufactured during the year being only 2 maunds and 33 seers of second sort. For the year 1856-57, there were 12 cultivations, 142 beegas, and 17 bis of land cultivated, 46 vats, and 2 maunds 29 seers, first sort, 6m. 3s. second sort, and 11 seers third sort indigo manufactured. The Zemindars of this district have never prosecuted the cultivation of indigo with a success proportionate to the expense incurred. It is on this account that the amount of cultivation has decreased to the extent shown by this return. In the Collectorate of Mehur, there was no cultivation and manufacture of indigo in 1857-58, but for 1856-57 the number of cultivations were 2, and 5 beegas and 2 bis of land cultivated, and 2 vats. The Collectorate of Shikarpoor and Sukkur has four talookas—Shikarpoor, Abdoo, Nowshera, and Sukkur, and in these there were 17 cultivations, 121 beegas 7 bis land cultivated, 110 vats, and indigo manufactured was 1m. 8s. 2ch. of first sort, 3m. 30s. 3ch. of second sort, and 1m. 7s. 2ch. of third sort: for 1856-57 there were 48 cultivations, 516 beegas and 1 bis land cultivated, 200 vats, and 8m. 37s. first sort, 32m. 21s. 10ch. second sort, 3m. 12s. 8ch. third sort indigo manufactured. In the district of Rohree there are four Deputy Collectorates, —Rohree, Gotekee, Meerpoor, and Ooboura, which had 121 cultivations, 1,327 beegas, and 7 bis of land cultivated, 402 vats, and 11m. 5s. first sort, 46m. 21s. second sort, and 20m. 20s. third sort of indigo manufactured during the year: for 1856-57 there were 397 cultivations, 3,983 beegas and 14 bis of land cultivated, 534 vats, and 26m. 22s. 10ch. first sort, 52m. 35s. 7ch. second sort, and 37m. 27s. and 15ch. third sort indigo manufactured. The cause of the decrease here shown is owing to loss sustained last year by cultivators in the Meerpoor talooka; when the indigo fields were inundated and the plant spoiled, by having the colouring matter washed off. Now that bunds have been made, and security against loss attained, the cultivation of indigo will soon more than recover itself. Comparing the totals of 1856-57 to 1857-58 there is a decrease during the latter year of 317 cultivations, 3,150 beegas and 9 bis of cultivated land, 261 vats, and 20m. 35s. 8ch. of first sort, 38m. 15s. 14ch. second sort, and 19m. 24s. 5ch. of third sort indigo manufactured. From the contrasted statement of prices obtained for the indigo produced in the Upper Scinde Collectorate, compared with those obtained for the colour produced elsewhere, it appears that the average total of prices for the four districts of the Larkhanah Deputy Collectorate is, indigo Rs. 66 per maund for the first sort, Rs. 54 for the second, and Rs. 52 for the third sort, while those for Dadur (Khelat), Khyrpoor (H. H. Meer Ali Morad's territory), Musty Khan and Lukhman-ka-Tanda, and Meerwah, the average total is Rs. 66-14, Rs. 57-4, and Rs. 45-8 for each sort respectively. There is none for the Deputy Collectorate of Mehur. For the four districts of Shikarpoor and Sukkur Collectorates, the average total is Rs. 41-4, Rs. 50, and Rs. 32-4, while for Khyrpoor, Meer Ali Moorad's district, Khyrpoor, and Mustikar-ki-Tanda respectively, the average total is Rs. 59, Rs. 53, and Rs. 45-12. For Rohree, the total is Rs. 56-8, Rs. 50-8, and Rs. 41-6, compared with the Khyrpoor territory and Bhawalpoor territory, the average total of which is Rs. 57-5-8, Rs. 51-1-1, and Rs. 43-9-1. The grand average total of prices of indigo produced in the Upper Scinde Collectorate is Rs. 163-12 for the first sort, Rs. 15-4-8 for the second, and Rs. 125-10 for the third sort, while the grand total of prices of foreign colour is Rs. 183-3-8, Rs. 161-5-1, and Rs. 134-13-1 for each sort respectively. It is shown by the statement of indigo cultivation in the Hyderabad Collectorate for 1857-58, that there was no cultivation whatever for the talookas of Mahomed Khan's Tanda and Meerpoor. In the talooka of Halla 175 beegas of land were cultivated which produced 59 maunds and 2 seers, at a price of Rs. per maund. In the Nowshera talooka the interest evinced in the production of indigo was very satisfactory, there being 1,496 beegas and 7 bis of land cultivated, which yielded a produce of 199 maunds and 30 seers at Rs. 50 and 60 per maund. The total extent of land cultivated in the Hyderabad Collectorate was therefore 1,671 beegas and 7 bis, making a produce of 258 maunds and 38 seers.

"Sir,—I have the honour to report for your information my arrival here last night in a water-boat from Kooria Moorla (Jiblie Island) under the following circumstances. On the morning of the 19th January, about 7.30 A.M., it then blowing hard from the N.N.W., I was sent away in the jolly boat of H.M.'s steamer Elphinstone, with a party of hands, to endeavour to bring back into shoal water a water boat which had parted from her anchor in shore, and had drifted from thence past the vessel to seaward,—the cutter having been previously sent with a boatswain's mate and eight men for the same purpose. Upon my getting to the boat, about two miles to leeward of the ship, I found that, from the heavy sea running, it would be perfect madness attempting to tow her, and the boatswain's mate previous to my arrival having close reefed and loosed sails, I sent the cutter and jolly back to the ship, keeping six men (and a boy who remained by mistake), made sail to close reefs, hauled in the slack chain, and endeavoured to beat back to the shipping. After the first board, I saw that the vessel was only going to leeward. I, however, kept working under the lee of the island, in the hope of the wind shifting a point or two, until sunset, steering the whole time myself, thinking that probably the ship, which was then hull down to windward, with yards braced up, and rolling heavily, might slip and run down to us. Seeing nothing of this, however, and the sea and wind rapidly increasing, knowing that before morning I should not lose sight of the island, I stood on a wind to the westward, hoping to get some shelter under the islands lying to the westward of Jiblie, or at any rate under the main land of Ras Nus, the only sail the boat was able to carry being balanced reefed mainsail and close reefed stay foresail, this pressing her heavily in the puffa, and shipping much water, keeping

HYDROPHOBIA.—Captain Dunsterville, deputy magistrate in charge of Sehwan, has brought to the notice of the magistrate of Kurrachee the practice in vogue among the Mahomedans of Sind of throwing a black cloth, soaked in water, over a patient in the last and most violent stage of hydrophobia. The effect produced by this treatment is that the patient ceases to struggle, and sinks rapidly but quietly into death. The captain mentions a popular delusion on the sub-

COLOMBO, March 14, 1859.—The coffee exports of the fortnight have not been large. Two vessels have taken to London 7,402 cwt. of plantation and 607 native; and two vessels to France 2,366 plantation and 16,055 native. The aggregate is 27,030, in the proportions of 9,768 plantation and 17,262 native. Our total exports since 1st October, 1858, are thus raised to 163,053 plantation, 130,077 native; total, 293,130. The pearl fishery has commenced under the most favourable auspices, and is likely to add a larger sum than was estimated to the revenue of 1859. The Governor was expected to visit the scene of the fishery, where preparations were being made to afford him a fitting reception. The oysters sold on the first day averaged Rs. 50 (£5 18s.) per thousand, while on the second day the price rose to £7 per thousand. This, we believe, is unprecedented. A large number of native capitalists from India are competing at the fishery, besides which, the quality of the oysters must be very superior.—First the mutiny, and then the measures taken to repress the mutiny, have tended to spread money amongst certain classes of the natives of India, and they, true to their instincts, will, as rapidly as possible, invest their wealth in such portable and easily secreted articles as pearls. Captain Graham, the immigration agent, has reached Tuticoreen, whence he is expected to afford information to the commissioners in Colombo as to the best class of vessels, &c. We may thus hope that a beginning will speedily be made. The weather was hot and dry until last night, when a heavy down pour of rain occurred. Coffee curing goes briskly forward in Colombo, while in the interior the prospects of next crop continue good. In the matter of the bankruptcy of Messrs. Bell, Miller, and Co., of Colombo, a first class certificate has been granted to Mr. Miller; but the judge has taken time to consider the nature of the certificate to be granted to Mr. Bell. The island allowances of officers serving in Ceylon have been revised, and the civil officers of Government have been relieved, since 1st January, from stoppages on account of pension. An additional expenditure of some £6,000 to £8,000 is involved in these changes. Mr. Lee, the Postmaster General, has applied for leave to retire on the pension to which his services entitle him. Mr. Dalziel is a candidate for the vacancy, with every chance of success.—Overland Observer.

THE PEARL FISHERY.—The fishery commenced on 8th March, and on the 9th, 50 boats from the Cheval Paar brought in 271,000 oysters, for which there was great competition at from 57 to 60 rupee per 1,000; average about 59 rupees. On the 11th, 50 boats brought in from the Cheval Paar 267,000 oysters; sold at 56½ to 60 rupees. On the 12th, 50 boats from the Cheval Paar brought in 390,734 oysters, of which 388,000 sold at 55½ to 56½ rupees. The receipts for the three days were,—1st day, £1,612. 10s.; 2nd day, £1,528; 3rd day, 2,170. 10s.;—total, £5,311.

BURMAH.

A TEAK FOREST.—The Rangoon Chronicle informs us that a very large teak forest has been discovered on the north side of the Arracan river. The magistrate, with 100 men, has proceeded to the spot to make a survey. The district is inhabited only by savages, and has remained hitherto unexplored. The story as it stands does not seem very probable. A few clumps of teak may have been found, but savages soon learn the value of timber, and the forest, if accessible, must have been discovered.

A LIBEL.—The Moulmein Advertiser accuses Mr. Parish, the chaplain of the station, of neglecting his duties to go butterfly hunting. The facts of the case appear to be that Mr. Parish visited Mergui, which is within his charge, that he took advantage of his church being unroofed to seize a holiday, and that he is fond of natural history.

RANGOON RAILWAY.—The Rangoon Chronicle mentions that a short railway line is to be laid down in Rangoon, from the river to the arsenal in the Shoey Dagon Pagoda. The line is to have a gradient of 1 in 150, and the carriages will be drawn by elephants. Should the scheme succeed the line will be extended. The utility of such a work is not very obvious, unless the arsenal is also a great workshop.

THE "SPARROW HAWK" AMONG THE PIRATES.—H. H.'s steam gun-boat Sparrow Hawk, Captain Byng, R.N., returned from her cruise among the islands of the Mergui Archipelago on Thursday evening last. Lieut. Hill, officiating Deputy Commissioner, Mergui, having occasion to visit the village of Malewan on duty, Captain Byng, Lieuts. Irwin and Gilpin, accompanied him in the ship's cutter, and had no sooner rounded Victoria Point at the mouth of the Pakehan river than an alarm was given that the Goung Gyouk's canoe was attacked by pirates. Captain Byng went off to his assistance, and was received by a murderous discharge of musketry, which continued for some time, and caused the death of a marine in the boat, and the piratical junk slipped her cable and put out to sea. As the attack was unexpected and sudden, the presence of the pirates being unknown, and Capt. Byng and party without proper arms and ammunition for defence, Lieut. Irwin was sent off in the canoe to bring down the other boats from the ship with all the necessary munitions of war, while Capt. Byng and party kept up the pursuit. The officers and men on board had already heard the firing and armed and sent the boats off at once, and Lieut. Irwin met them on the way. The junk was now stealing away by the shore, followed smartly up by the Sparrow Hawk's boats, an incessant fire being kept up on both sides. The Sparrow Hawk was gaining quickly up when the pirates shored their junk and ran into the jungles. The boat was boarded, but all that was to be seen was a pirate Malay dead. The prize was towed out into deep water and burnt as of no value, and the pirates in fancied security remained in the jungles. Some days after, Capt. Byng having seen all safe about the islands, returned to his steamer, and was there met by the headman of the village "Renown," a Siamese town, who informed him that he was deputed by one of the Siamese princes to inform him of his being apprised of the attack of the pirates, and of their having taken to the jungle—that he had taken twelve of them, and had them in custody, waiting the orders of the British commander; that two more were still at large, and parties sent out to effect their capture. On the following day, the 22nd of January, Lieutenant Irwin was sent for the prisoners, who were, after some unnecessary delay, delivered up. There were eleven prisoners (Malays and Chinese) given up to Lieutenant Irwin, one having died the previous night from the effects of his wounds. Six others were afterwards captured. There appears to have been sixteen in all in the piratical junk that made the attack, who had lately come from Junk Ceylon; the remainder of the prisoners belonging to pirate prahus infesting the islands, who, having taken the alarm, escaped into the jungle, and were captured with the others. The casualties are represented to be as follows. On our side one able seaman killed, one Burmese killed in the Goung Gyouk's canoe; wounded—one able-bodied seaman severely, one Burmese of Goung Gyouk's canoe do., one Burmese slightly, and two Malays severely wounded of deputy commissioner's boat.—Advertiser, Feb. 5.

CENTRAL ASIA.

Our Cabul advices are from the 4th to the 18th February:—On the 4th, a servant of Nazir Naem Khan arrived from Cabul, and stated that while certain persons were on their way to Cabul, one of them died on the road through the severity of the snow, and two arrived at Cabul with great difficulty. On the 5th, Sirdar Khooshdil Khan received a paper from Cabul, and was much incensed with the contents of it. He has obtained five days' leave, and proceeded to Cabul with five sowars. On the 6th some person represented to the Ameer that Sirdar Mahomed Ameer Khan will arrive at Jellalabad this day. The Ameer sent Sirdar Mahomed Hossen Khan and Sirdar Mahomed Usuff Khan in advance to receive him. On the 7th, the Ameer became ill at night, and sent for Hukeem Abdool Waseh Khan Mirza, who stayed with him until he was well. On the 8th, a despatch was received from the British authorities at Peshawur, stating that Taj Mahomed Khan and Ameer Nahomed Khan, who had arrived from Cabul with certificates, which they had obtained from some European gentlemen, had prayed for some pension being given them for the services they had performed; they were sent back to the Ameer, and nothing had been done for them. The Ameer was much pleased by their arrival. On the 9th, the Ameer asked the Mulliks of Sungo-Kheil what they paid annually as revenue. They represented that they paid Rs. 8000 annually to the late Sekunder Khan, who always sent 4000 to the Ameer, and the other 4000 he brought into his own house. His sons also are doing in the same way. The Ameer immediately sent summonses to the sons of the late Sekunder Khan to present themselves in Jellalabad. On the 10th, a letter was received from Sirdar Mahomed Shereef Khan from Cabul, stating that the wheat-sellers are not selling their stores at a cheaper rate, though they have been severely tortured; he was obliged to break their granaries and sell the wheat at 2½ seers, and barley 4 seers (Cabul) per rupee. On the 12th news arrived from Candahar, that the Russian agent was still at Heerat, and negotiating with the ruler of that place, who was also purchasing and storing provisions. A Kafilah arrived from Peshawur, and stated to the Ameer that war was going on near Bareilly only; and that two detachments of 400 Europeans each had arrived at Peshawur, and were learning their drill every day. On the 13th, the Mulliks of the Oordgee tribe, inhabitants of Lughman, complained to the Ameer that Mahomed Shah Khan had taken forcible possession of their lands, and registered them in his own name. Mahomed Shah Khan, who was present in durbar on the occasion, denied the charge, and said that it was all false, and that he had always been kind to the plaintiffs. The Ameer made over the case to the Cazeer to decide according to the laws of religion. The artillery of Sirdar Mahomed Ameer Khan arrived from Cabul this day. News also arrived of such a heavy shock of earthquake having been felt at Cabul as the oldest inhabitant does not remember having felt in all his life. On the 14th despatches were received from Sirdar Ally Khan from Candahar, stating that news had reached that 6000 sowars, with six guns, had left Mushed for Ghorian. When they had reached their first stage, orders were received from the king of Persia, countermanding their progress until further notice. The ruler of Herat is collecting forces, and gathering stores and provisions. Sirdar Shere Ally Khan has also written for Rs. 5000 to be sent to him. On the 15th, the Ameer ordered Nazir Naem Khan to send Rs. 3000 from Jellalabad, and Rs. 2000 from Cabul, to Sirdar Shere Ally Khan. On the 16th, news arrived through the bankers of Jellalabad that Meer Atalik Beg, ruler of Koondooz, had gone to the king of Bokhara, and represented his case to him. The king told him to wait till the new year, when he (the king) will make arrangements for his country, and that he has written to the rulers of Hissar and Koolab to give him (Meer Atalik Beg) aid whenever wanted.—Lahore Chronicle, Feb. 26.

JAVA.

DUTCH EXPEDITION TO BONI.—The news received from East Java regarding the expedition to Boni are favourable. The Government Commissioner for the affairs of Celebes arrived at Makassar on the 18th January, in H.M.'s steam ship Madura, and on the 24th reached Bonthain. On the 7th February the whole military force had united at Sinjai and Bajao. The envoys of the Government, who on the 5th February conveyed the ultimatum to Bajao were denied audience; on the following day, having returned thither, they were admitted to an audience and the ultimatum received. On the 9th February, however, Boni wished to delay giving an answer to the conditions proposed, in order that it might previously consult regarding them with the kingdoms of Soppeng and Wajo. This request was refused, and a demand was at the same time made that a decided answer should be given on the 10th. This day having expired without the demand being complied with, the envoys on the 11th February delivered a declaration of war. Although at first permitted, the approach of boats for reconnoitring was afterwards forbidden. On the 12th February, a part of the expedition was landed, which occupied Bajao with small loss.—Singapore Free Press.

Sir Hugh Rose.

Feb. 22.—No. 231.—The Right Hon. the Governor General of India in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following letter from the dep. adjt. gen. of the army, No. 3, Jan. 19, forwarding a despatch from Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., reporting the capture of Gwalior.

This report was received by the Government in the military department on the 25th January, 1859.

H.E. in Council very highly appreciates the services rendered by Sir Hugh Rose and the troops under his command, as described in these papers.

The vigorous and successful operations of the Central India Field Force in June last had a widely-spread effect in pacifying the provinces, not only of Central India, but of the North-Western Government; and the Governor General in Council cordially thanks Major general Sir H. Rose, and the officers and men of that distinguished force, for all that was then accomplished by them.

It will be satisfactory to the Governor General to bring these papers to the notice of her Majesty's Government.
R. J. H. BACH, Maj. gen.

The 33rd N.I.

No. 296.—The native officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 33rd Regt. N.I. having, upon the recent restoration of their arms, presented a petition to government, tendering of their own free will their services wherever they may be required to proceed, whether by land or by water, and within or without the British territories, and praying that the regiment may in future be borne upon the rolls of the army as a volunteer corps, H.E. the Gov. Gen. in Council is pleased to direct that the 33rd N.I. shall henceforward be borne upon the rolls of the Bengal army as a volunteer corps for general service.

Movements of Regiments.

The following movements in the regiment of Bengal artillery are directed to take place, in anticipation of the sanction of Government:—

Right half of the 1st troop 3rd brigade, from Jullundur to Sealkote, when relieved by 4th comp. 3rd battn.

Hd. Qrs. 1st battn., from Jullundur to Delhi, on receipt of this order.

Hd. Qrs. 3rd battn., from Meerut to Jullundur, on receipt of this order.

4th comp. 3rd battn. and No. 24 light field battery, from Meerut to Jullundur, on completion of the organisation of its battery.

Officers of Mutinied or Disbanded Regiments.

As it appears that great misapprehension exists as to the authority of officers commanding divisions and stations over the officers of mutinied or disbanded regiments, the C. in C. is pleased to lay down the following rules:—

I. Every officer of a mutinied or disbanded regiment who is not now in the performance of duty under the orders of some competent authority (save those who are on leave of absence), is to report himself forthwith to the officer commanding the division in which he may happen to be; and the officer commanding the division will either attach him to a corps, or employ him in such manner as he may deem most advantageous for the service.

II. In like manner, an officer of one of these regiments when relieved from any duty (such as being attached to parties of invalids or recruits, &c.), should be at once employed under the orders of the superior local authority.

III. Officers of disbanded or mutinied regiments who are on leave of absence should, prior to the expiration of their leave, report themselves to the officer commanding the division within the limits of which they may be residing, who will give orders for their employment as before directed.

IV. All orders issued relative to the disposal of officers under these instructions should be at once reported to head quarters for confirmation.

2. H.E. considers it to be the duty of officers commanding divisions and stations to see that no officer remains unemployed within the limits of their command; and lists are to be kept in the staff offices of divisions, brigades, and stations, of all officers who come under the provision of this order, in view to their being at all times made use of as may be best for the service.

Civil Furloughs.

Home Dept., Fort William, March 1.—The following resolution, passed by H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council, is published for general information:—

Resolution.—It was announced by the notification issued under the orders of H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council, on 26th January last, that twenty-three furloughs were available on that date for allotment to the members of the Bengal Civil Service.

Since then two furloughs have lapsed, one by the return to India of Mr. C. S. Belli, and the other by expiry—Mr. G. G. Balfour.

There are on this date the twelve following applicants, to whom, according to the rules notified on the 26th January last, furloughs are hereby allotted:—

Bengal.—Messrs. W. Bell, O. Toogood, H. R. Madocks, for the unexpired portion of their furloughs;

F. C. Fowle, F. B. Drummond, and J. Watson, for 3 years.

N.W. Provinces.—Messrs. G. P. Money and F. Thomson, for the unexpired portion of his furloughs.

Punjab.—Messrs. H. B. Henderson for 3 years, and R. P. Jenkins for the unexpired portion of their furlough.

Oude.—Messrs. W. A. Forbes for the unexpired portion of his furlough, and S. N. Martin for 3 years.

In addition to the above, three furloughs have been allotted up to this date on m.c., viz.:—

Messrs. G. H. M. Ricketts, E. C. Craster, and H. Monckton, for 3 years.

Furloughs.

Adj. gen's Office, Allahabad, Feb. 18.

It is announced for general information that H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council has been pleased to decide that furloughs on private affairs may now be granted to officers generally, without any other restriction than what the emergency of the service may necessarily impose.

2. The C. in C. desires officers commanding regiments, stations, and divisions, to exercise a proper supervision in this matter; and to decline to transmit applications to head quarters in cases where they may consider officers cannot be spared from their posts without prejudice to the service.

Court Martial.

LIEUT. WALTER WILLIAM YOUNG, H.M.'s 78th HIGHLANDERS.

Adj. Gen's Office, H.M.'s Forces, Calcutta, Feb. 22.

Hd. Qrs., Camp Lucknow, Feb. 11.—At a general court martial assembled at Bareilly, on Monday, Jan. 17, 1859, Lieut. W. W. Young, H.M.'s 78th highlanders, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in the following instances:—

1st.—For having, between Jan. 1 and Nov. 1, 1858, appropriated to his own use the sum of 235 rupees, or thereabouts, being the amount of a balance due to Lutchman, contractor of Meerut, for summer clothing supplied at that station to the detachment under Lieut. Young's command, which said sum had been recovered by him (Lieut. Young) from the men who had received the clothing, but had not been paid to the contractor on the date last stated.

2nd.—For having, between Jan. 1 and Nov. 1, 1858, appropriated to his own use the sum of 480 rupees, or thereabouts, being the aggregate amount of money he had improperly deducted, at the rate of five rupees each, from ninety-six men of the detachment under his (Lieut. Young's) command, on account of bedding never supplied to them, and notwithstanding that those men had been furnished with bedding at the expense of Government.

Finding.—With regard to the first instance of the charge, "guilty," with the exception of the words "to his own use," of which the court acquits him, as it considers that the misappropriation of the money mentioned in the charge was the result of an error of judgment. With regard to the second instance, the court is of opinion that the prisoner, Lieut. W. W. Young, is "guilty," with the exception of the words "to his own use," and the word "improper," of which words it acquits him, as it considers that misappropriation was the result of an error of judgment, and that the prisoner was not aware of the intention of Government to give the bedding gratis to the men of his detachment. For these reasons the court acquits the prisoner of the words in the preamble, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and finds that he is "guilty" of conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

Sentence.—to be severely reprimanded, and further, to make good the deficiencies named in the charge, namely, seven hundred and fifteen rupees forthwith.

The finding and the sentence, "to be severely reprimanded," are confirmed; but the award, that Lieut. Young do make good the deficiencies named in the charge, is not confirmed.

(Signed) CLYDE, General,
Commander in Chief.

REMARKS BY THE RIGHT HON. THE C. IN C. IN INDIA.

The court had no authority to sentence Lieut. Young to make good the deficiencies named in the charge, for this officer was not charged with having embezzled public money under the 22nd section of the Mutiny Act.

His offence, as developed at the trial, consisted in this: that after having made deductions from the men under the command for clothing and bedding, the money was not forthcoming when required, Lieut. Young having expended it in making advances to certain officers belonging to detachments.

In releasing Lieut. Young from arrest, Lord Clyde directs that he will take immediate measures to make good the deficiencies proved against him on the public account, owing to errors of judgment on his part.

Lord Clyde is happy in being able to concur with the court in considering that Lieut. Young has only been guilty of errors of judgment; but he would take this opportunity of warning Lieut. Young, and the young officers of the army, that a departure from strict rule in the management of accounts in which public money is concerned is full of danger, as being contrary to H.M.'s regulations, and has been the cause of ruin to numerous officers, when there has been no original intentions of fraud.

Lieut. Young will be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

By order of H.E. the C. in C.,
W. L. PAKENHAM, col.,
Adj. gen. H.M.'s forces in India.

Closing of Grog-shops.

Adj. Gen's Office, Allahabad, Feb. 14.—In continuation of G. O. of Oct. 24, 1854, his excellency the C. in C., at the request of the hon. the Lieut. Gov. of N. W. Provinces, is pleased to promulgate the rules in force for the prevention of the sale of spirituous liquors to British troops marching through the North Western Provinces; and, with advertence to paragraph 5, to direct officers com. regiments and detachments to give timely intimation of their approach to collectors of districts:—

APPENDIX XIII.

"2nd. The Tehseeldar, on receiving intimation of the approach of an European regt. or detachment, will depute a petty officer to each shop, who will be instructed to close it to all comers, from the time the advance guard approaches till the rear guard has passed onward a full mile; he will report to his superior when the shop was closed, and when re-opened.

"3rd. The Tehseeldar will grant a certificate to the abkeer, and calculate to the abkeer, and calculate the compensation due to him at the daily rate specified in the license, plus 10 per cent. for loss of profits. Provided that if the shop be closed for six hours only, compensation shall not be given; if for more than six hours, adjustment shall be made for twelve hours; and if more than twelve, for twenty-four hours, and so on.

"4th. The native officer in attendance on an European regiment or detachment, will make the same arrangement at or in the vicinity of the encamping ground, and may apply to the commanding officer for a guard to be posted there, if necessary.

"5th. Collectors, on receiving intimation of the march of an European regt. or detachment, will give timely information to the Tehseeldar, who will be responsible for the due observance of these rules.

"6th. Compensation for closing shops is not to be deducted from the contracts of farmers of duties, or of abkeers when the mehal is under direct management. ### Capture of Gwalior.

Fort William, 22nd Feb., 1859.

No. 231.—The rt. hon. the Gov. gen. of India in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following letter from the depy. adj. gen. of the army, No. 3 of the 19th Jan., 1859, forwarding a despatch from Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., reporting the capture of Gwalior.

This report was received by the gov't. in the mil'y. depart. on the 25th Jan., 1859.

H.E. in Council very highly appreciates the services rendered by Sir Hugh Rose and the troops under his command, as described in these papers.

The vigorous and successful operations of the Central Indian Field Force in June last, had a widely-spread effect in pacifying the provinces, not only of Central India, but of the N.W. Gov't.; and the Gov. gen. in Council cordially thanks Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose and the officers and men of that distinguished force for all that was then accomplished by them.

It will be satisfactory to the Gov. gen. to bring these papers to the notice of H.M.'s Gov't.

R. J. H. BRACH, Maj. gen.,

Sec. to the Gov't. of India.

No. 3.

From the Depy. adj. gen. of the army to the Sec. to the Gov't. Mil'y. dept., Allahabad.

Sir,—I have the honour, by desire of the C. in C., to enclose, for submission to H.E. the rt. hon. the Gov. gen., a despatch dated 13th Oct. last, received only this day, from Maj. gen. Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., reporting the capture of Gwalior.

2. It gives Lord Clyde much pleasure to acknowledge the great and distinguished service rendered upon this occasion by Sir Hugh Rose and the troops under his command.

H. W. NORAM, Maj.,

Depy. adj. gen. of the army.

Hd. qrs.' Camp, Lucknow,
19th Jan., 1859.

From Maj. gen. Hugh Rose, comdg. F.F. south of the Nerbudda, to Maj. gen. Sir W. Mansfield, K.C.B., Chief of the Staff of the army in India.

Dated Poonah, 13th Oct., 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to report to you for the information of the C. in C. in India, the operations against Gwalior of the Central India F.F. and other troops, placed under my command by H.E.

After the capture of Calpee, the first reports made to me by Lieut. col. Robertson, comdg. the column of pursuit,* were to the effect that the scattered parties of the routed rebel army, without guns, tents, &c., were making, in the utmost disorder, for the Sheer Ghat, via Jaloun, a ford across the Jumna, thirty-five or forty miles to the north-east of Calpee. Subsequent accounts from the same officer stated that a great part of the rebels had, after leaving Jaloun, made a turn in a more westerly direction, which was contrary to the one Sir Robert Hamilton felt persuaded the rebels would follow; he was certain that they would make for Oude, and cross the Jumna at the Sheer Ghat, or the ford to the west of it, near Juggurmanpore.

In this uncertainty, Lieut. col. Robertson, with good judgment, took up a position with the pursuing column, which enabled him not to be the dupe of a feigned move to draw him off the real chase, but to follow the rebels by the shortest line, should they move westwards or northwards.

A short rest having enabled my European troops to recover a little, I reinforced Lieut. col. Robertson with the troops detailed in the margin.†

Subsequent reports from Lieut. col. Robertson stated that he had reason to think that all the rebels had decidedly taken a westerly direction, and that they had been reinforced by 800 Oude cav. under Ruheen Ali Nurut, of Bareilly.

Lieut. col. Robertson followed the line to the west taken by the rebels from Jaloun towards the Pohooj and Scinde rivers, and got into communication with the Rajah of Rampoor, to the west of the Pahooj, a faithful friend of the English. Lieut. col. Robertson's intelligence and knowledge of the natives and their language enabled him to obtain some very valuable information from this person; and that officer reported to me, in two expresses, that the Calpee rebels had certainly taken the road to Gwalior.

So little was at that time the great intrigue of Tantia Topee against Scindiah's power even suspected, that the best authority for intelligence could not bring himself to think that Lieut. col. Robertson was not mistaken in his information. However, not many hours after the arrival of Lieut. col. Robertson's last express, Sir R. Hamilton received similar intelligence, when I instantly ordered off Brigdr. Stuart, with the force detailed in the margin,* to reinforce Lieut. col. Robertson, and march on Gwalior after the rebels.

Before the taking of Calpee, in compliance with instructions from the Gov. gen. and the C. in C. in India, conveyed to me through Sir R. Hamilton, that after the taking of that place, and the breaking up of the Central India F.F., part of it should be sent to Gwalior, and the rest to Jhansi, as garrisons for those places, I had submitted to his lordship the details of the distribution of troops for the two services.

The news received for the next few days was very uncertain and contradictory. An express letter from Scindiah's agent at Gwalior removed apprehensions for his safety, and that of his Gov't. It stated that the rebels, who were in a destitute condition, had, being still several miles from Gwalior, implored Scindiah's favour and protection in language and with a demeanour the reverse of hostile.

Subsequent accounts from Lieut. col. Robertson, which were confirmed by Sir R. Hamilton, conveyed the news which created a sensation throughout India, only equalled by that which was caused by the first mutinies. The rebel army had attacked Scindiah at Bhadurpore, nine miles from Gwalior; his troops of all arms, with the exception of a few of his body-guard, had treacherously gone over—the art. in mass, to the enemy. His highness himself, after bravely doing his best to make his troops do their duty, had been forced by the fire of his own art., and the combined attacks of his troops and of the rebel army, to fly to Agra, which he reached with difficulty, accompanied only by one or two attendants. The rebels had entered Gwalior, taken Scindiah's treasury and jewels, the latter said to be of fabulous value. The garrison of the fort of Gwalior, considered to be one of the strongest, if not the strongest, fortress in India, had, after a mock resistance, opened its gates to the rebels. Finally, from fifty to sixty fine guns, comprising horse, field, and siege art., had fallen, as well as an arsenal with abundance of warlike stores, into the hands of the enemy. In short, the rebels who had fled, in the most disorderly flight and helpless state from Calpee, were now completely set up with abundance of money, a capital park of art., plenty of materiel, and Scindiah's army as their allies.

Gwalior itself, without the fort, was a prize of no ordinary value, comprising the old city, and the "Lushker," that is, the ancient Mahratta camp, converted into a handsome and flourishing city, both together containing a population of 1,70,000 souls.

But other circumstances combined to render the loss of Gwalior the most serious event which had occurred since the revolt.

Scindiah, the Maharajah or Prince of Gwalior, is our very faithful ally; and, with one exception, he is the most powerful of the independent princes of India. The central and geographical position of the Gwalior States and their extent, give their rulers great political and military power over the whole of India. The main artery of communication and the electric line from Bombay to Central India, Agra, and the N.W. Provinces, traverse for hundreds of miles Scindiah's dominions.

Scindiah's troops who went over to the rebels, were the best organised and drilled of all the native levies.

To render this state of things still more embarrassing, Gwalior fell into rebel hands at the most unfavourable time of the year for military operations—on the eve of the great rains, and when the heat of summer was at its maximum.

No one, therefore, could foresee the extent of evil if Gwalior were not promptly wrested from the rebels—if Tantia Topee, with the immense acquisition of political influence and military strength which the possession of that place gave the rebel cause, had time to reorganise the Calpee army, which he could easily do, with the resources of Gwalior at his disposal. The worst forebodings would have come to pass if Tantia Topee, leaving either the Calpee or the Gwalior army at Gwalior for its defence, marched with the other southwards and unfurled the standard of the Peshwa in the Deccan and Southern Mahrattas. These districts, and the west of India generally, were much denuded of troops; and the attachment of the inhabitants of the ancient Peishwarate to their former Gov't. is too well known to admit of a doubt as to what course they would have pursued if Tantia Topee had appeared amongst them with a large army.

The inhabitants of Indore had given so many proofs of unfavourable feeling, that there was reason to fear that they would, if the opportunity offered, follow the example of Gwalior.

It was of vital importance that troops should reach Gwalior before the rains set in; firstly, because I had no pontoons for siege artillery, and to have transported the siege guns across the Scinde and Pohooj rivers, swollen to a great height by the rains, would have been most difficult, if not impossible. Secondly, the siege of the fort or city of Gwalior, protracted by the difficulties consequent on the monsoon, would have had the worst effect on our military prestige and the state of affairs.

The Gov. gen. expressed a wish that not an hour should be lost in reaching Gwalior. I therefore, leaving by order Capt. Ommaney's R.A. batt. of four 9-pdrs., belonging to the 2nd brig. Central India F.F., as part of the permanent garrison of Calpee, and one trp. 3rd By. L.C., 21st compy. R. engrs., a wing of the 3rd By. Eur., and 400 of the 24th By. N.I., to garrison Calpee until relieved by Bengal troops, marched with the troops detailed in the margin* from Calpee on the 6th June, and followed Brigadier Stuart's column, by forced marches, on the road to Gwalior by Jaloun, marching by night to avoid the sun.

The officer comdg. the outlying picket of H.M.'s 14th lt. drags., having reported to me on the night of the third day that his men had fallen from their saddles from exhaustion, I had the picket relieved by a party of Hyderabad cav.

Owing to the difficulties of the baggage on very bad carts crossing one very deep nullah, and the rapid advance of my column, a detach. of the 25th By. N.I., who guarded them, were three days without a meal. After a bathe in the Pohooj, and a short rest to enable them to make their cakes, these good soldiers were quite ready to march on. I caught up Brigdr. Stuart's column at the fort of Indoorkee, on the Scinde river.

I received H.E. the C. in C.'s instructions that I was reinforced for the operations against Gwalior, as follows:—

Col. Riddell's moveable column of Bengal troops of the strength detailed in the margin,† was to escort a large supply of siege guns, mortars, and ammunition, from Agra to Gwalior for the siege of that place.

Brigdr. Smith, with a brig. of the Rajpootana F.F., was to march from the neighbourhood of Chandaree to Gwalior.

The Hyderabad Contingent, after their hard service, had received permission and orders to return home; almost all of these troops had commenced their return to the Deccan, and some of them were far advanced on their road. With a good feeling, which cannot be sufficiently praised, all of the Contingent which had formed part of the Central India F.F. instantly counter-marched and moved against Gwalior, on the wish being intimated to the officers commanding their separate bodies that they should perform this fresh act of good service for the Govt.

When the crisis occurred at Gwalior, part of the Central India F.F. were garrisoning Calpee, part had marched to Gwalior, and part had been left as a garrison at Jhansi.

H.E. the C. in C. in India was pleased to direct my attention to preventing the move of the rebels southwards from Gwalior to the Deccan.

H.E. was pleased to express his entire approbation of my having selected Agra as the base of my operations, in consequence of the communication between that place and Gwalior being the shortest and the best. But even this communication was rendered imperfect by the passage of a very difficult ford across the Chumbul.

My plan of attack of Gwalior was as follows:—To invest it as much as its great extent would allow, and then to attack it by its weakest side, the investing troops cutting off the escape of the rebels.

I hoped that a successful attack of the enemy, outside or inside the city, would, like Calpee, be followed by the capture of the fort.

In order to invest Gwalior from the south, I directed Maj. Orr, comdg. Hyderabad Contingent, to move from Jhansi to Puneer, on the road from Gwalior to Sepree. Maj. Orr's force was too weak to attack Gwalior from that quarter, but he was perfectly placed for cutting off the retreat of the rebels to the south, assisted, as he would be, by the other investing corps.

Information as to the enemy's position is the surest guarantee of success. I had no plan of Gwalior or its environs. With great trouble I had ascertained that the weakest side of Gwalior, and consequently the best for an attack, was the east, as it was girt by high hills on that side, the summits of which it is true were difficult of access; but that on the other hand, slopes which descended gradually from these summits towards, and close to, the "Lushker," would enable me after taking the heights to drive the enemy down from slope to slope, from the lowest of which I could cannonade the "Lushker," and, covered by the fire of artillery, storm the new town, that is, the "Lushker;" thus cutting in two the enemy's whole line, consisting of the old city, above which is the fort, and the "Lushker," or new city.

This point of attack had another advantage. It enabled me to attack Gwalior almost unhurt by the fire of the fort.

I directed Brigdr. Smith, with the Rajpootana F.F., to move from Sepree to Kotah-ka-Serai, about seven miles to the east of Gwalior.

I myself, with Brigdr. Stuart's column, and the small one I had brought from Calpee, marched against the Morar Cantonments, which were said to be occupied in force by the enemy. These cantonments for the troops stationed at Gwalior are about five miles from that city, on the river Morar. They had only been partially burnt by the rebels, and Scindiah's Govt. had been at much trouble and expense to repair the old buildings, and construct others for the force which was to be the garrison of Gwalior.

Once in possession of the Morar Cantonments, I could establish there my hospital, parks, &c. Divested of these incumbrances, and leaving a force in the Morar Cantonments, which could protect it, and at the same time form part of the investment of Gwalior, and pursue when required, I was free to join Brigdr. Smith at Katah-ka-Serai, and with his force and my own attack Gwalior.

To complete the investment which, roughly speaking, was to enclose Gwalior from the S. E. and N., I sent instructions to Col. Riddell to move with his column by the Agra and Gwalior road to the residency, about seven miles to the north of Gwalior. Col. Riddell, by extending his force from the residency down the west side of Gwalior, invested it from that side.

I had the honour to report that all the columns of operations would, I trusted, be at their posts by the 19th of June.

On the 16th of June I arrived at Bahadurpoor, about four or five miles from the Morar cantonments.

I directed Capt. Abbott, with his cav., to reconnoitre Morar; he reported that the rebels were in force in front of it. I reconnoitred their position myself closely, and found that the side of the cantonments fronting us was occupied by strong bodies of cav., and that on their right were guns and a good deal of inf.

My force had had a long and fatiguing march, and the sun had been up for some time. Four or five miles' more march in the sun, and a combat afterwards, would be a great trial for the men's strength. On the other hand, Morar looked inviting, with several good buildings not yet burnt; they would be good quarters for a portion of the force; if I delayed the attack until the next day, the enemy were sure to burn them. A prompt attack has always more effect on the rebels than a procrastinated one.

I, therefore, countermanded the order for encamping, and made the following arrangements to attack the enemy.

I formed my force in two lines; the first line consisting of the 1st brig., under Brigdr. Stuart, the second line, under Brigdr. gen. Napier, in support of the 1st, consisting of only a small part of the 2nd brig., as the rest of it was at Calpee.

Capt. Abbott, Hyderabad cav., covered the advance.

I requested Brigdr. gen. Napier to watch well the hills on my left and rear, in which the enemy were supposed to be; and to advance in echelon from the right, which enabled him, his left refused to guard my left rear, on the outward flank of which I left baggage and incumbrances.

I also sent patrols of cav. far away into the hills on my left and rear to search them.

Sir R. Hamilton, who has a remarkable acquaintance with the ground and localities of Central India, had warned me to take care of the ground on the proper right, and in front of Morar, as it was full of ravines and treacherous ground.

Both lines advanced; No. 18 lt. f. batt. and the siege guns in the centre of the first; H.M.'s 86th regt. on their right; the 25th By. N.I. on their left; H.M.'s 14th lt. drags. on each flank.

To march to our position in order of battle we had gone over the ground on which a short time before Scindiah had been attacked and routed by his faithless troops and the Calpee rebels. It was strewn with dead horses.

My plan was to mask the dangerous ground to my left, towards which the enemy evidently wished to draw me; to outflank the enemy's left, double it up, and cut off their retreat from the road over the bridge in rear of the cantonments leading to Gwalior.

My first line advanced in line across the plain between Morar and Bahadurpoor dressing by their centre with the regularity of a parade movement. The enemy retired from their position in front of Morar into the cantonments.

I have the honour to enclose a copy of Brigdr. gen. Napier's report of the operations of his brig.,* and to confirm fully all his recommendations to the officers under his command.

Under the guidance of Scindiah's agent, I took ground diagonally to the right, in order to get on the road which led to the cantonments, and which enabled me to turn the enemy's left; but he missed the road. In the mean time we had got on the edge of broken ground; a masked battery in the enemy's centre, concealed by trees, and the guns on their right opened a cross fire on us, causing some casualties amongst Capt. Abbott's Hyderabad cav., who showed admirable steadiness.

I directed the siege guns under Lieut. Strutt, B.A., and No. 18 lt. fd. batt., under Lieut. Harcourt, By. art., to be placed in position obliquely to my front, which enabled them to open a telling fire diagonally to their left on the enemy's batteries. I beg to mention especially Lieuts. Strutt and Harcourt, for the prompt steadiness with which they brought their guns into action on difficult ground, and for the efficiency of their fire.

The rebel arty. caused some casualties amongst the horses of these guns.

The lay of the ground favouring the rebels' right batt., I brought to my left Capt. Lightfoot's 1st trp. By. H. A. against it from the 2nd line.

Nullahs and broken ground prevented the advance of Capt. Abbot's cav., whom I placed under cover; and of H. M.'s 14th lt. drags. under Capt. Thompson on the right, who reinforced my left.

The enemy's cav., of whom the 5th irregulars formed part, showed in force in position in our front, along the road through the cantonments.

I reinforced my left, now near the dangerous ground on the enemy's right, with the 25th By. N.I., and advanced across bad ground, H.M.'s 86th regt. firing, whom I had thrown into skirmishing order, and took by storm, under a cannonade of the enemy's right battery, all the Morar cantonments in our front. The rebels retired at a gallop.

I brought forward the right shoulders of the 86th line of skirmishers, and, resting their right on the right bank of the Morar, swept the whole cantonments, and occupied them.

Capt. Abbott, whose horse was killed under him by a round shot, in the mean time had contrived to get across the nullahs further to the right, and, wheeling to his left, galloped through the cantonments, and joined in the pursuit of the enemy, who retired from their right.

But the delay in his advance, caused by the very difficult ground, prevented his arriving in time to cut off the retreat of the enemy across the bridge.

My left, which had been refused, conformed to the right, and changed position to the left, fronting the nullah's on the enemy's right, which it had now approached.

The advanced nullah and others in rear of it were lined with rebel sepoys, who gave no sign, until my left approached them, when they opened on it a very heavy fire, on which Maj. Rich, H.M.'s 71st Highland L.I., moved his skirmishers rapidly forward to dislodge them. Lieut. Neave led with ardent courage the charge, and fell, when close to the nullah, mortally wounded, sincerely regretted by his brave regiment and his general.

The 71st very gallantly took the nullah and others in rear by storm; Lieut. Rose, 25th By.N.I., afforded them useful co-operation by skillfully placing a party of his regt. so as to enfilade these dangerous entrenchments. The whole of the rebels in them were killed, after a desperate resistance, which cost the 71st, I regret to say, besides Lieut. Neave, several brave soldiers killed and wounded; Sergt. McGill, killed; Sergt. Wilson, wounded dangerously; Corpl. Leslie, killed; two privates killed and six wounded, of the whole of whom I make special mention. In the advanced nullah alone seventy rebels lay dead, belonging to Scindiah's faithless guards, and wearing English accoutrements and breast plates, on which was engraved "1st Brigade Infantry."

H.M.'s 71st regt. proved on this, as well as on every other occasion whilst under my orders, that they will maintain by their courage and discipline the historical renown of which they bear so many honoured records on their colours.

When a wing of the regt. was prostrated by sun-sickness after the action at Koonch, the only complaint I heard in the field hospitals from these gallant young soldiers was that they could not rise and fight.

The success of the day was completed by the destruction of the rebels in the nullahs, and a most successful pursuit of the rebels by Capt. Thompson, with a wing of H.M.'s 14th lt. drags. These rebels had been turned by Capt. Abbott's advance from the ford of the river, across which and the bridge the main body had retreated. Capt. Thompson caught them in the plains, before they could reach the hills to which they were hurrying, and made a great slaughter of them. I beg to mention specially Capt. Thompson, H.M.'s 14th lt. drags., for the very good service which he did on this occasion.

In making special mention of Capt. Lightfoot for his good services this day, I beg to state how very much indebted I am to the officers and men of his, the 1st or "Eagle" trp. By. H. A., for their excellent and gallant conduct throughout the campaign. In my actions I made very liberal use of the troop, in pouring an unexpected or flank fire into the enemy. On all these occasions the first tp. was worthy of its former fame, and proved that no arm of the service is more dangerous to its foe than fleet art.

I beg to make special mention of Brigdr. gen. Napier, for the very important assistance which he afforded me in the action of the 16th of June.

I beg to bring to H. E.'s notice the good spirit and gallantry which the troops displayed in the rapid and successful operation against the Morar cantonments. Their march from Calpee was a very trying one. In consequence of the great heat in the tents by day, the men could not get the rest which they lost by marching at night to avoid sun.

Notwithstanding a long march to Bahadurpoor, the troops ceased their preparations for encamping, and marched, fasting, with the utmost alacrity and steadiness against Morar, going five miles and taking it in two hours, under a heavy and well-directed cannonade, and a resolute resistance on the left. The capture of Morar had good results. It was the first defeat which the combined forces of the Calpee and Gwalior rebels had sustained.

Morar, the military station, and an outwork of Gwalior, was an important strategical point. It gave me the command of the line of the Morar river of the road to Agra, and enabled me to communicate with Brigdr. Smith to the left, and the residency to the right.

The rebels were surprised by my rapid march from Calpee; they intended to make a determined stand at Morar, and had commenced storing it with supplies, which fell into our hands. They had not time to burn the houses still standing since the mutiny, nor the temporary sheds prepared by Scindiah, all of which were turned to good account.

I got immediately into communication with Brigdr. Smith, at Kotah-ka-Serai, and reconnoitred Gwalior.

I have the honour to enclose Brigdr. Smith's report of his operation from Kotah-ka-Serai.* I beg fully to confirm his recommendation of the officers under his command, and to draw H.E.'s attention particularly to the great gallantry and devotion displayed by H. M.'s 8th hussars, in the brilliant charge which they made through the enemy's camp, of which one most important result was the death of the Ranees of Jhansi; who, though a lady, was the bravest and best military leader of the rebels. The enemy's guns which the 8th hussars brought back out of the rebel camp into their own, were the best proofs of how nobly they had fought and conquered.

Brigdr. Smith having asked for reinforcements, I directed Lieut. col. Robertson to join him with the force detailed in the margin.†

My reconnoissance of Gwalior satisfied me that the information on which I had decided to attack it was good. If I had attacked it from Morar, I should have had to cross the plain between Morar and Gwalior under the fire of the fort and of masked and formidable batteries established in strong houses and gardens on the banks of the old canal, and a dry river in front of the Phool Bagh Palace.

I could not leave Morar, so close to Gwalior, without adequate protection. The arrival of the troops which had been left to garrison Calpee, on the morning of the 18th of June, enabled me, leaving my incumbrances, to march from Morar on the afternoon of the same day for Kotah-ka-Serai, with the force detailed in the margin,* leaving in Morar the force also detailed in the margin, under Brig. gen. Napier, for its protection, the investment of Gwalior, and the pursuit of the enemy, when they retreated from it.

The march to Kotah-ka-Serai, about twenty miles, was very harassing; 100 men of H.M.'s 86th regt. alone were compelled by sun-sickness to fall out and go into dhoolies. These same men the next day, unmindful of their illness, fell in with their companies, and took part in the assault of Gwalior, which corroborates what I said in a previous report, that the spirit of the soldiers often made them fight when they were too weak to march.

My column bivouacked on the left bank of the river Morar, and during the night I communicated with Brigdr. Smith and Col. Hicks, comdg. art., Central India F.F.

Brigdr. Smith reported to me that, in consequence of the enemy occupying in great numbers the hills opposite Kotah-ka-Serai, on the other side of the River Morar, and pressing on him, he had advanced from his position at Kotah-ka-Serai, and following the road from that place to Gwalior, by the ford across the river, had attacked and driven the enemy from the hills on his right front, and occupied the road, which led through a pass, about two miles in length, through the hills, and to the left or south side of a very deep and dry old canal cut out of the rock, which led from the ford close by the left of the road through the pass to the foot of the rock, or Fort of Gwalior.

The enemy retained possession of the hills to the left of the pass and canal.

To the left of the road and canal in the pass rose, from a narrow plain, a succession of slopes, intersected by ravines; a ridge ran along the top of the slopes, on which the enemy had placed a batt. of 9-pdrs. To protect the batt. and position the enemy had concentrated a numerous force of all arms on the ridge, as well as a large body of cav. in rear of it.

About a mile and a half further back, and about the same distance from the left of the road, was stationed in a gorge of hills, a large body of the enemy's inf., with guns. They guarded a road which branched off from the ford southwards through the hills to Gwalior.

Brigdr. Smith's position in the hills was weak and cramped. His left and rear were threatened by the two bodies just described. The camp baggage and guns were in the pass, into which came shots from the enemy's batt. on the ridge.

It was clear that the enemy must be driven from both positions, the one on the ridge and the other in the gorge, before I advanced on Gwalior.

The enemy by occupying positions on the hill so far from and unsupported by Gwalior had exposed himself to be cut off. The impeding to my doing so was the deep canal, impracticable for cav. and inf.; on this obstacle the enemy probably relied for protection. To remove it I directed the comp. of Madras sappers and miners to make a bridge some way to the left rear of our position across the canal. The bridge or dam was to be ready by sun-set. I made the plan to cross over this bridge during the night, with a force of all arms, get on the South road to Gwalior through the hills above-mentioned, place myself between Gwalior and the enemy's two positions; fall on them a little before day-break, when H.M.'s 86th and 95th regts., supported by the rest of Brigdr. Smith's brig., were concealed by the ravines, to attack their front and turn their left flank.

I beg to make special mention of Maj. the Hon. E. C. H. Massey, 95th regt.; Capt. Bolton, dep. asst. gr. mr. genl., Rajpootana F.F., and Lieut. Harris, of the 3rd tr. By. H.A., for the assistance which their intelligence and knowledge of the ground enabled them to give me in making the reconnoissance and plan.

Lieut. Haggart, commsy. of ordnance, by my desire, had during the night moved the two 18-prs. and 8-inch howtz. from our bivouac, up to the top of a steep height, which was to the right of the road and canal, and opposite the ridge. I selected a point at the extremity of a spur of this height towards Gwalior as a position for these guns, from whence they commanded the plain below the entrance to the pass, and were enabled to fire on the enemy's batt. on the ridge.

The enemy's batt. opened a fire on the siege pieces as they were being taken into position, wounding two draught elephants, and causing, subsequently, some casualties in the batt. after it had opened its fire under Lieut. Haggart's orders.

The enemy set on fire with their guns some monster haystacks, which were close to the canal, in the narrow plain, in order that our outposts might not be covered by them.

The carriage of the 8-inch howtz. had been so shaken by hundreds of miles' marching, that its charge was reduced a pound below the regulation, in order to save the carriage; this irregular charge rendered its fire much less certain. The want of sights on the 18-pdrs. affected the accuracy of their fire in field-firing.

Col. Hicks suggested to me the withdrawal of the siege guns, as they did not appear to damage the enemy; whereas they had our range. I thought that it would be better that the batt. should cease firing gradually, when the enemy would probably do the same, than that it should be withdrawn. This was done, and the enemy's batt. ceased to fire.

Before the batteries had begun to diminish their firing, I had gone to our batt. to inspect it, and to watch an advance of the enemy's inf. in skirmishing order, from the ridge and a spur of it to the left, against our chain of outposts and left, which rested on the canal.

Soon afterwards a large body of troops was seen debouching from Gwalior; and my videttes reported that fresh guns were ascending the heights to reinforce the batt. on the ridge, which was good news, as the more guns the rebels brought up to the heights, the more were we likely to take next morning.

I reinforced the sentries and pickets on our left, on the line of the canal, and ordered the troops in camp to be ready to turn out.

The enemy's skirmishers and my line guarding the canal became engaged. At this time I received an express from Sir R. Hamilton, telling me that he had received information that the sepoys and valaites had agreed to attack me to-day.

The enemy seemed inclined not to confine their advance to an affair of outposts, but to be determined to attack my left flank, which they knew was weak.

The Central India F.F. was the worse for last night's harassing march and a bad bivouac on rock. The comp. of Madras sappers and miners, whose zeal and intelligence no hardships can abate, would have completed the bridge across the canal by sunset; and I anticipated the best results from availing myself of it for one purpose—cutting off during the night the enemy's numerous force of all arms on the hills.

I would, therefore, have preferred not engaging the enemy before the time determined on.

On the other hand, the position in the narrow pass was so false that it became necessary to free it from the risk of a serious attack, and to change the defensive for the offensive.

I therefore directed Brigdr. Stuart, with H.M.'s 86th regt., who were encamped between the pass and the river Morar, to move from my left rear, supported by the 25th By. N.I., across the canal, crown the heights on the other side of it, and attack the enemy in their left flank, by which means they would mask the fire of the batt.

As a diversion in favour of Brigdr. Stuart's attack, I directed Brigdr. Smith to move Lieut. col. Raines, with H.M.'s 95th regt., from the left of my right front across the canal in skirmishing order, over the shoulder of the hill, on which was the rebel's battery, against the enemy's left flank. This oblique movement and the lay of the ground prevented the 95th suffering seriously from the guns of the battery.

I further directed Brigdr. Smith to move up the 10th By. N.I. from the right of my right front across the canal to support the advance of the 95th, and to cover my right.

I ordered up also the 3rd trp. By. H.A. to the entrance of the pass towards Gwalior, supported by a squad. of H.M.'s 8th hussars.

I disposed the rest of my force in support of the attacking columns and for the defence of the camp from the rear.

Brigdr. Smith, crossing the canal, ascended steadily, with H.M.'s 80th regt., under Lieut. col. Louth, the heights. The enemy, taken in flank, retired rapidly from the attack of our left flank towards the battery. The skirmishers of the 86th, with their usual ardour, pressed the rebel inf. so hard that they did not make a stand even under their guns, but retreated across the entrenchment, in the rear of which they were in position. The gallant skirmishers gave them no time to rally in the battery; but, dashing with a cheer at the parapet, crossed it, and took the guns which defended the ridge, three excellent English 9-pdrs.

The 86th, leaving a party with the captured guns, passed on after the enemy's cav. and inf., who fled, part towards Gwalior, part to the hill to the south.

Lieut. col. Raines coming up with a wing of the 95th to the entrenchments, with good judgment turned the captured guns on the enemy's cav. and inf., which he saw in detached bodies in the plain below at a distance of 1,000 yards, as well as on the body which had retired to our left.

Lieut. col. Raines placed Lieut. Brockman, of the 86th, with some men of his regt., in command of one gun; and Lieut. Budgeon and Lieut. and Adj. Sexton, of the 95th, with men of their regt., who had been instructed in the gun exercise, in command of the two other guns. These guns, thus manned by inf., made excellent practice, and although sometimes short, the shot ricocheted amongst the enemy. Four rebel batteries in front of Gwalior now opened a hot fire of shot and shell on our advanced lines.

Lieut. col. Raines reports that Lieut. Read, 10th By. N.I., rendered him great assistance in firing and pointing the enemy's art.

The 10th By. N.I., under the command of Lieut. Roome, crossed the pass and the canal, and passing by the haystacks, which were now one burning mass, and moving up, as ordered in support of the 95th, and in protection of my right, found himself exposed to a fire of artillery and musketry, from the heights on the enemy's extreme left. Advancing with half of his regiment in skirmishing order, and leaving the remainder in support, he cleared the two nearest heights of the rebel infantry, and charging gallantly, took two brass field pieces and three mortars, which were in a plain at the foot of the second height.

My troops were now in possession of the highest range of heights to the East of Gwalior which we saw at our feet. The sight was interesting. To our right was the handsome palace of the Phool Bagh, with its gardens, and the old city, surmounted by the fort, remarkable for its ancient architecture, with lines of extensive fortifications round the high and precipitous rock of Gwalior. To our left lay the "Lushker," or new city, with its spacious houses half hidden by trees.

The ground corresponded exactly with the accounts of it which I had collected; the slopes descended gradually towards Gwalior; the lowest one commanding the grand parade of the Lushker, which was almost out of fire of the fort and afforded an entrance into the city.

I felt convinced that I could take Gwalior before sunset.

I determined to make a general advance against all the positions which the enemy occupied for the defence of Gwalior, extending from beyond the palace of the Phool Bagh on their right, to the extensive barracks on the left of the grand parade of the Lushker, and then take the "Lushker" by assault.

For this purpose I ordered the 3rd tr. By. H.A., with a squad. of the 8th hussars, to follow the road which led out of the pass, and advance, covering my extreme right parallel with the troops attacking Gwalior.

Lieut. col. Owen, with the 1st By. lancers, had been moved to the heights to cover the captured guns; the rapidity and dexterity with which they got over very difficult ground does the regt. and their commander much credit. I now ordered them to descend the heights to the rear, get into the road which led through the hills to the south, and occupy the entrance to it, which led to the grand parade, for the purpose of assisting in the attack of that important point and of the Lushker.

I left a sufficient force of all arms for the protection of my camp, which was exposed.

I had some time before ordered up No. 4 L.F.B. with two troops of H.M.'s 14th lt. drags. to the heights to cover my advanced line, and to answer the enemy's batteries in position in front of Gwalior. The hilly and difficult nature of the ground, particularly the deep canal which the guns had to traverse, prevented their arrival.

The advanced line was irregular, as it followed the formation of the hills. The 86th formed the left, which was in advance; the 95th the right, was refused.

The left of the 86th, who pursued, across a deep ravine to the range of hills to the south, the body of the enemy who retreated to the left, had returned, and rested their left on a hamlet situate on the crest of the range which commanded Gwalior. The enemy immediately brought a batt. of two 18-pdrs. in front of the grand parade to bear on the hamlet, and firing from a great elevation sent round shot into it in rapid succession and with accurate aim.

Skirmishers of the 86th had descended the hill towards the barracks, and were advancing against the enemy, who had made a stand in houses amongst trees at the foot of the hill. Lieut. col. Raines with good judgment detached Capt. Smith's comp. of the 95th in support of them.

I moved the 86th from the hamlet lower down the hill, extending them at large intervals from the left to the right. This new position of the 86th rendered the fire of the 18-pdrs. harmless, and gave more support to the skirmishers, who soon gave a good account of the enemy in the houses.

In front of, and between the two hills occupied by the 86th and 95th, was the last slope, a spur of the hill on which were the 86th, commanding the rows of barracks and the grand parade of the Lushker, to which the enemy, passed by our advance, had now withdrawn the two 18-pdrs.

I occupied the left of this slope with a wing of the 25th By. N.I., which I brought up from the second line, leaving the other wing in support. I moved a party of the 95th down to the right of the slope, under Maj. Vials, who judiciously took possession of a strong powder magazine, surrounded by a wall at the further end of it.

Lieut. Roome, with the 10th regt. By. N.I. on the right, after he had captured the guns and field pieces, took with much spirit a strong building used as an arsenal on his right, from which the enemy had poured a galling fire on his regt., and occupied a trench at the bottom of the hill on which was the arsenal, from which the 10th kept up a heavy fire on the enemy, who had retreated to a position in front of Gwalior.

Lieut. col. Raines, leaving a comp. of the 95th to guard the captured guns, which kept up an effective fire on the enemy, joined with the rest of his regt., and reinforced Maj. Vials on the lowest slope.

Lieut. col. Raines perceived a large body of the enemy's cav. in the vicinity of the two 18-pdrs. now placed in batt. who he believed were posted there for the purpose of making a dash at the British troops, should they attempt to take the guns. He therefore halted and waited for orders and reinforcements, placing two companies of the 95th in skirmishing order, lying down along the crest of the hill, a part of the 10th By. N. I. being in rear as supports. The enemy now took courage to come out, and fired the 18-pdrs. with grape and canister at our position, on which Lieut. col. Raines detached some skirmishers of the 95th to covered ground to his front, who kept up with their Enfields such an effective fire on the 18-pdrs. and the cav. that after firing eight rounds, the enemy was obliged to cease firing, and retire behind the buildings of the grand parade.

Lieut. Knatchbull, and seven or eight men of No. 1 comp. of the 95th regt., dragged a small howzr. and its tumbril, captured by the 10th By. N. I., up the slope, and opened fire with it on the enemy behind the buildings.

The officer comdg. No. 4 lt. f. batt., by following the road through the pass beyond its entrance, had found a passage, a very difficult one, across the canal; but on taking them up a bridle road which led to the heights a gun upset and delayed very inopportunistly the arrival of his art. on the heights. Lieut. Goldsworthy, of H.M.'s 8th hussars, who acted as A.D.C., during the day, and whose activity and intelligence were most useful to me at last brought up one 9-pdr. to the heights.

The enemy were firing with much vivacity, but little effect, from the batteries on the right, and the captured guns were answering them.

Large bodies of the enemy's inf. and cav. were marching out of Gwalior, by all its issues, and moving towards us, but not in order or with resolution as if to attack or take up a position of defence.

Besides storming the grand parade, from which I could enter the Lushker, and pass by the main street to Scindiah's palace, I directed Brigdr. Smith, with No. 3 troop By. H.A., and a squad. of H.M.'s 14th lt. drags., to be ready to attack the enemy's positions at the Phool Bagh and beyond it. This attack protected the right of the troops attacking the grand parade, and turned at the same time the enemy's left.

The 1st By. lancers were to debouch from the entrance of the road on which I had placed them, charge the enemy on the grand parade, and assist the 95th in taking it.

The 10th By. N.I. were to support these regts.

One 9-pdr., the only piece of artillery which, on account of the ground, had been able to reach the heights, was to cover from the lowest slope the advance of the 1st lancers and of the 95th, and to clear the grand parade.

The 86th were to remain in their position on the left of the heights, cover my left, and, if necessary, assist the camp.

One wing of the 25th By. N.I. was to attack the barracks, and cover the left of the 95th attacking the grand parade. The other was to be in support on the slopes.

Two trps. of the 14th lt. drags. were in support on the lower slopes.

All being ready, I gave the word for the general attack of Gwalior.

I had placed the 9-pdr. in position opposite the two 18-pdrs. I directed it to be fired with shrapnel at the enemy, who were attempting to load them. The shrapnel, a remarkable one, burst just over the 18-pdrs. into about twenty pieces, killed and disabled some of the gunners, and put the rest to flight. Parties of the enemy's cav. and inf. on the grand parade began to retire.

An animated war-scene ensued.

The 1st lancers, under Lieut. col. Owen—the 1st squad. led by Lieut. Heath, that in support by Capt. Loch—issuing from the road, charged most gallantly, in sight of the British troops descending the slopes of the heights of Gwalior into the grand parade, and clearing all the right of it, pursued, carried away by their ardour, the enemy's inf. into the Lushker, Capt. Loch leading and Lieut. Heath supporting this second charge, in which, I much regret to say, fell in the streets, shot through the heart, Lieut. Mills, of the 1st lancers, bravely leading his men—a very promising and popular young officer. Capt. Loch, in the pursuit, cut down the rebel who shot him.

Lieut. col. Raines, with two comps. of the 95th, charged down the slope with his usual spirit, and took the 18-pdrs. and two small mortars on the grand parade.

After going down the slope, and pointing out to Brigdr. Smith the position which he was to attack, I joined Lieut. col. Raines on the grand parade, and went with him against the town, with the intention of forcing our way, if necessary, to the palace, the possession of which would give us the Lushker. As I did not know whether the enemy might not, as at Jhansi, defend the streets and houses, I directed Lieut. col. Raines to form four comps. of his regt. for street fighting, and to leave the remainder of them in reserve on the grand parade.

Lieut. Roome, with the 10th By.N.I., on the general advance being ordered, moved to the front, skirmishing through the buildings to the right of the grand parade, and killed many of the enemy who stood there; those who escaped were afterwards cut up by the 1st By. lancers.

The fort kept up a constant fire during our advance; but, as I foresaw, our position masked us from it.

Shortly after entering the Lushker we met the 1st lancers returning with Lieut. Mills, just killed, Lieut. col. Owens not thinking it advisable that his regt. as cav. should be involved in street fighting with the large number of the enemy who were in the town.

The enemy's cav. and inf. retreated before us through the town so rapidly that we could not even get a sight of them, although we advanced by more streets than one, with the view to cut them off. The rebel cav., as usual, availing themselves of their horses, headed the retreat instead of covering it. After marching for more than a mile through the streets, we reached Scindiah's palace.

I detached patrols in every direction to clear the streets. Before sunset the whole of the Lushker, or new city, was completely in our hands. I directed the old town and fort to be occupied immediately, Scindiah's agent, who made his appearance on our entering the palace, having informed me that the enemy had evacuated the fort.

I appointed Lieut. col. Robertson to be comdt. of Gwalior, and to occupy it with his regt.

Brigdr. Smith got into action with the enemy near the palace of the Phool Bagh, which he took, killing numbers of the enemy. He then pursued a large body of the enemy who were retreating round the rock of Gwalior towards the Residency, covering their retreat with H.A. guns. After a stout resistance, which did credit to the enemy's art., Brigdr. Smith, who did good service on this occasion, as well as throughout the day, captured the guns and killed numbers of the retreating rebels. Brigdr. Smith speaks very highly of the steadiness with which H.M.'s 14th lt. drags., escorting the 3rd trp. By. H.A., stood the enemy's art. fire, shot and shell, and of the ardour with which they afterwards fell on the guns and the retreating enemy.

Brigdr. Smith, who was directed by me to pursue with all his vigour the enemy retreating by the Residency, inflicted much loss on them and captured more guns; he continued the pursuit until long after night, and until his men and horses were unable to move on.

The officer directed to occupy the old city and fort of Gwalior reported that the enemy still held the fort, and had fired on him when he approached it.

The information, therefore, of Scindiah's agent that the fort was evacuated was incorrect.

As it was now night, I directed the fort to be invested as closely as possible from the old City, and the Lushker; and the officer comdg. the cav. at the Phool Bagh, to complete the rest of the investment.

The next morning the enemy again fired from the fort on the troops. Lieut. Rose, 25th By. N.I., Lieut. Waller and a party of the 25th under his orders, with some of Scindiah's police, burst open the main gateway of the fort, and surprising the other gates before the garrison, a party of fanatical artillerymen, mussulmans, could shut them, reached an archway on which the rebels brought a gun to bear; Lieut. Rose and his party got through the archway unscathed by the fire of the guns, and then engaged in a desperate and hand-to-hand combat with the rebels, who defended the narrow street leading into the fort. But the determined gallantry of Lieut. Rose, and of the soldiers of the 25th aided by Lieut. Waller, who climbed with a few of his men on the roof of a house and shot the gunners, carried all before them; they took the fort and killed every man in it. But the gallant leader, Lieut. Rose, who has been twice specially mentioned by me for good and gallant conduct, fell in the fort, mortally wounded, closing his early career by taking the fort of Gwalior by force of arms.

Tantia Topee's character is a singular anomaly; he gives proof of great moral courage in undertaking the execution of the daring and important plans which he forms, but his nerve fails him in the combat which is to decide their success. Thus he planned the successful conspiracy to overthrow Scindiah's power. But as at Koonch and the Betwa, his flight was too early to be excusable, and too precipitate to be dignified.

Abandoning the defence of Gwalior whilst his troops were still fighting, Tantia Topee, with a considerable body of cav. and inf., attempted to retreat southwards by the road from Gwalior to Puniar and Goonah; but learning that Puniar was occupied by Maj. Orr's force, he went to the Residency, where the rest of the rebel army joined him in their retreat from Gwalior.

The Residency was to have been occupied by Col. Riddell, but reports from that officer showed that the difficulty of crossing the ford across the river Chumbul at Dhalpoor, where he had arrived on his road from Agra to Gwalior, rendered it impossible that his force could reach the Residency in time to invest Gwalior; a part of his force, two squads. of Meade's horse, arrived at Morar the day I left it for Kotah-ka-Serai, as an escort to Scindiah. I left the two squads. there to reinforce Brigdr. gen. Napier for the defence of Morar, and the pursuit. Capt. Meade volunteered to accompany me as acting A. d. C. His zeal and knowledge of the country rendered him of great use to me during the operation.

I sent an express to Brigdr. gen. Napier, at the Morar cantonments, requesting him to pursue the enemy as far, and as closely as he could. The enclosed report* from that officer shows how gallantly and successfully he and his troops carried out that very important service. Twenty-five pieces of artillery were the fruits of his most able pursuit, and the total dispersion of the enemy.

I wrote to Sir R. Hamilton, informing him of the capture of Gwalior, and took the liberty to suggest, with the expressions of my sincere respect and esteem for the Prince of Gwalior, that the sooner H.H. returned to his capital the better.

The next morning H.H. arrived at Gwalior with Sir R. Hamilton, Maj. Macpherson, and his retinue. I received Scindiah with every possible mark of respect, and, accompanied by all the superior officers of the forces, whose duties allowed them to be present, and all my personal and divisional staff, had the honour of escorting H.H. to his palace in the Lushker, with a squadron of H.M.'s 8th hussars, and another of H.M.'s 14th lt. drags., most honourable representatives of my force. Our road lay through the long and handsome street which leads from the grand parade to the palace, which was lined by crowds of inhabitants who greeted Scindiah with enthusiastic acclamations.

The British officers and soldiers, as well as myself, were rejoiced to see that in restoring to his rights the brave and faithful ally of our Government and country, we had also given back to his people a ruler who to all appearance had won their affections.

Scindiah is not a man of words, or professions; but it is due to him to say that he has been unceasing in his endeavours to prove how deep his gratitude is to the Supreme Govt. of India for their most prompt, energetic, and successful efforts in his favour, and to the troops who executed their orders in this respect. H. H. is always asking how he can prove those feelings to the troops. To a communication that H.H.

wished to present the forces with six months' batta I replied that I was extremely obliged to H.H., but that it was quite impossible that we could accept pecuniary remuneration from a foreign prince; that we had only performed a grateful duty, and were abundantly rewarded by having been useful to a prince who had so bravely and so truly stood by our Govt. and their cause. H.H. afterwards expressed the wish to give a medal for "Gwalior" to the troops engaged. I beg, without dilating on this matter, to leave it in the hands of H.E. the C. in C. in India, merely observing that my only wish is, that the officers and men should, if it be deemed right, have the permission to wear the medal; and that as regards myself, I would most willingly give up all claim to the decoration, if for the sake of precedent, or any other cause, my doing so would facilitate their obtaining it.

I venture to recommend most earnestly all the troops engaged in the "Gwalior" operations, the Central India F.F., as well as Brig. Smith's brig. of the Rajpootana F.F., to his lordship's most favourable consideration. It is not for me to describe the importance of the service which they performed. I am convinced that it is fully and generously appreciated by the exalted authorities whose high attributions and experience constitute them the judges of what would have been the state of India if Gwalior had remained for any length of time or, worse still, permanently in the hands of the rebels.

But, as the commander of the troops engaged, it is my duty to say, that although a most arduous campaign had impaired the health and strength of every man of my force, their discipline, devotion and courage remained unvarying and unshaken, enabling them to make a very rapid march in summer heat to Gwalior; fight and gain two actions on the road—one at the Morar cantonments, the other at Kotah-ka-Serai; arrive at their posts, from great distances and by bad roads, before Gwalior before the day appointed (the 19th of June), and on that same day carry by assault all the enemy's positions, on strong heights and in most difficult ground, taking one battery after another, twenty-seven pieces of artillery in the action, twenty-five in the pursuit, besides the guns in the fort, the old city, the new city, and, finally, the Rock of Gwalior, held to be one of the most important and strongest fortresses in India.

I marched on the 6th June from Calpee for Gwalior, and on the 10th of the same month the Gwalior States were restored to their Prince.

His lordship having been pleased to permit me, on account of my health, to give over the command to Brig. gen. Napier, I did so on the 29th June.

HUGH ROSE, maj. gen.,
Comg. F.F. south of the Nerbudda.

Brig. gen. Napier, c.b., comg. 2nd Brig. Central India F.F., to the Asst. Adj. Gen., Central India F.F.

Camp Morar, June 18, 1858.

Sir,—On the 16th inst. the 2nd brig., composed as below,* when in sight of the cantonments of Morar, was ordered by the Maj. gen. comg. the Central India F.F. to advance in echelon from the right, in support of the left of the 1st brig.

The force was disposed as follows:—No. 18 lt. f. batt. on the right, supported by Johnstone's Hyderabad horse; in the centre, the Madras sappers and miners, and wing of H. M.'s 71st Highland L. I., while on the left was a wing of H. M.'s 14th lt. drags.

On approaching the right of the cantonment, the enemy opened upon us from six guns, and I directed Lieut. Harcourt, comdg. No. 18 lt. f. batt. to engage them; an order which he had barely received when he was summoned to join the 1st brig.

My brig. being then reduced to the wing of H. M.'s 71st Highland L. I., the right wing of H. M.'s 14th lt. drags., Madras sappers and miners, and 100 horse of the Hyderabad contingent, continued to advance on the enemy, who were retreating in large numbers towards their right rear. At one moment there appeared a favourable opportunity to charge them with cav., but the deliberation with which they moved led me to suspect that they were assured that they were protected by the ground in front of them, and I sent my Brig. Major, Lieut. Maclachlin, and some Towana sowars to examine it. The result showed that the ground was completely intersected with ravines, lined with the enemy's infy. I therefore directed Col. Campbell, comdg. the wing of the 71st regt., to throw it forward in skirmishing order, supported by the 14th lt. drags. which was executed with great spirit by Maj. Rich on the right, who cleared the ravines on his front, leaving them filled with the enemy's dead, and relieving the H.A. from much annoyance from their musketry.

I regret to say that this service was not performed without the loss of a very promising young officer of H.M.'s 71st, Lieut. Neaves, who was shot whilst gallantly leading his men to the ravines.

Col. Campbell took two companies of the 71st under Lieut. Scott, and cleared some ravines on his left and front, killing every man of the enemy that held them; after which he was directed to clear the top of a hill, where a party of rebels held a temple and some strong ground. This duty was thoroughly effected, and thirty of the enemy left dead on the hill.

Whilst this was going on a tp. of H.M.'s 14th lt. drags. passed round the base of the hill, and cut up all the enemy who attempted to escape from it.

The protection of the left of the force and the rear being placed under my especial charge by the Major gen., I removed the remainder of the 14th drags. and Johnstone's Hyderabad horse towards the left to cover the rear, and to intercept the enemy's cav., who showed some disposition to move in that direction; but on observing our cav. they rapidly disappeared through the hills to the south of Gwalior.

The front being now quite clear of the enemy, I withdrew my brig. to the shelter of the cantonments, leaving, by the Maj. gen.'s order, the Hyderabad cav. to watch the flank and rear, until the whole of the baggage should come up. Towards sunset I withdrew them to a village on the left of the cantonments where they were quartered for the night.

The conduct of the whole of the troops under my command was excellent. Their perfect steadiness while under the fire of the enemy's batteries, and the gallantry with which they advanced to clear the ravines, were deserving of the Maj. gen.'s warm commendation.

The 71st dashed into the ravines and encountered the enemy hand to hand; the nature of the wounds received was evidence of the desperate resistance made by the rebels, who were almost entirely composed of Scindiah's mutinous sepoys.

I beg particularly to recommend to the Maj. gen.'s notice Col. Campbell, comdg. H.M.'s 71st, for the soldierlike way in which his regt. was brought into action; also Maj. Rich, H.M.'s 71st, for the spirited manner in which he cleared the ravines in his front. Also Lieut. Scott, 71st, comdg. the party which scoured the ravines on the left, and cleared the hill occupied by the enemy, which was of considerable height, and difficult of access. The enemy held a very strong position on the top of the hill in the temple, with rocks and broken ground to its rear. Also Maj. Scudamore, comdg. the right wing of H.M.'s 14th drags., which was skilfully handled, and ready for every call for its services. His skirmishers attacked and destroyed many of the enemy in the ravines.

Lieut. Gowan, with his troop, most efficiently cut off the enemy's retreat from the hill, and destroyed many of them.

Lieut. Gordon, of the Madras sappers, kept pace with the 71st, and joined in the attack on the ravines.

Also Lieut. Johnstone and the Hyderabad cav., whose conduct gave me very great satisfaction; they continued exposed to the fierce heat of the day without food or shelter, for many hours after the rest of the troops had withdrawn to the cantonments.
